CD1 POWER VACUUM

Candidates from around Arizona vie to replace Rep. Ann Kirkpatrick

HANK STEPHENSON

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

The power vacuum U.S. Rep. Ann Kirkpatrick will leave behind as she runs for the U.S. Senate is drawing many familiar faces into the contest for Arizona’s 1st Congressional District — including well-known politicians who live outside the district’s boundaries.

The race is shaping up in one of the most competitive, largest and most expensive congressional districts in the country. The open seat in Arizona’s sprawling CD1 is attracting a cast of ambitious candidates, many of whom have been unable to gain a foothold in their own areas and are looking to keep their political careers alive.

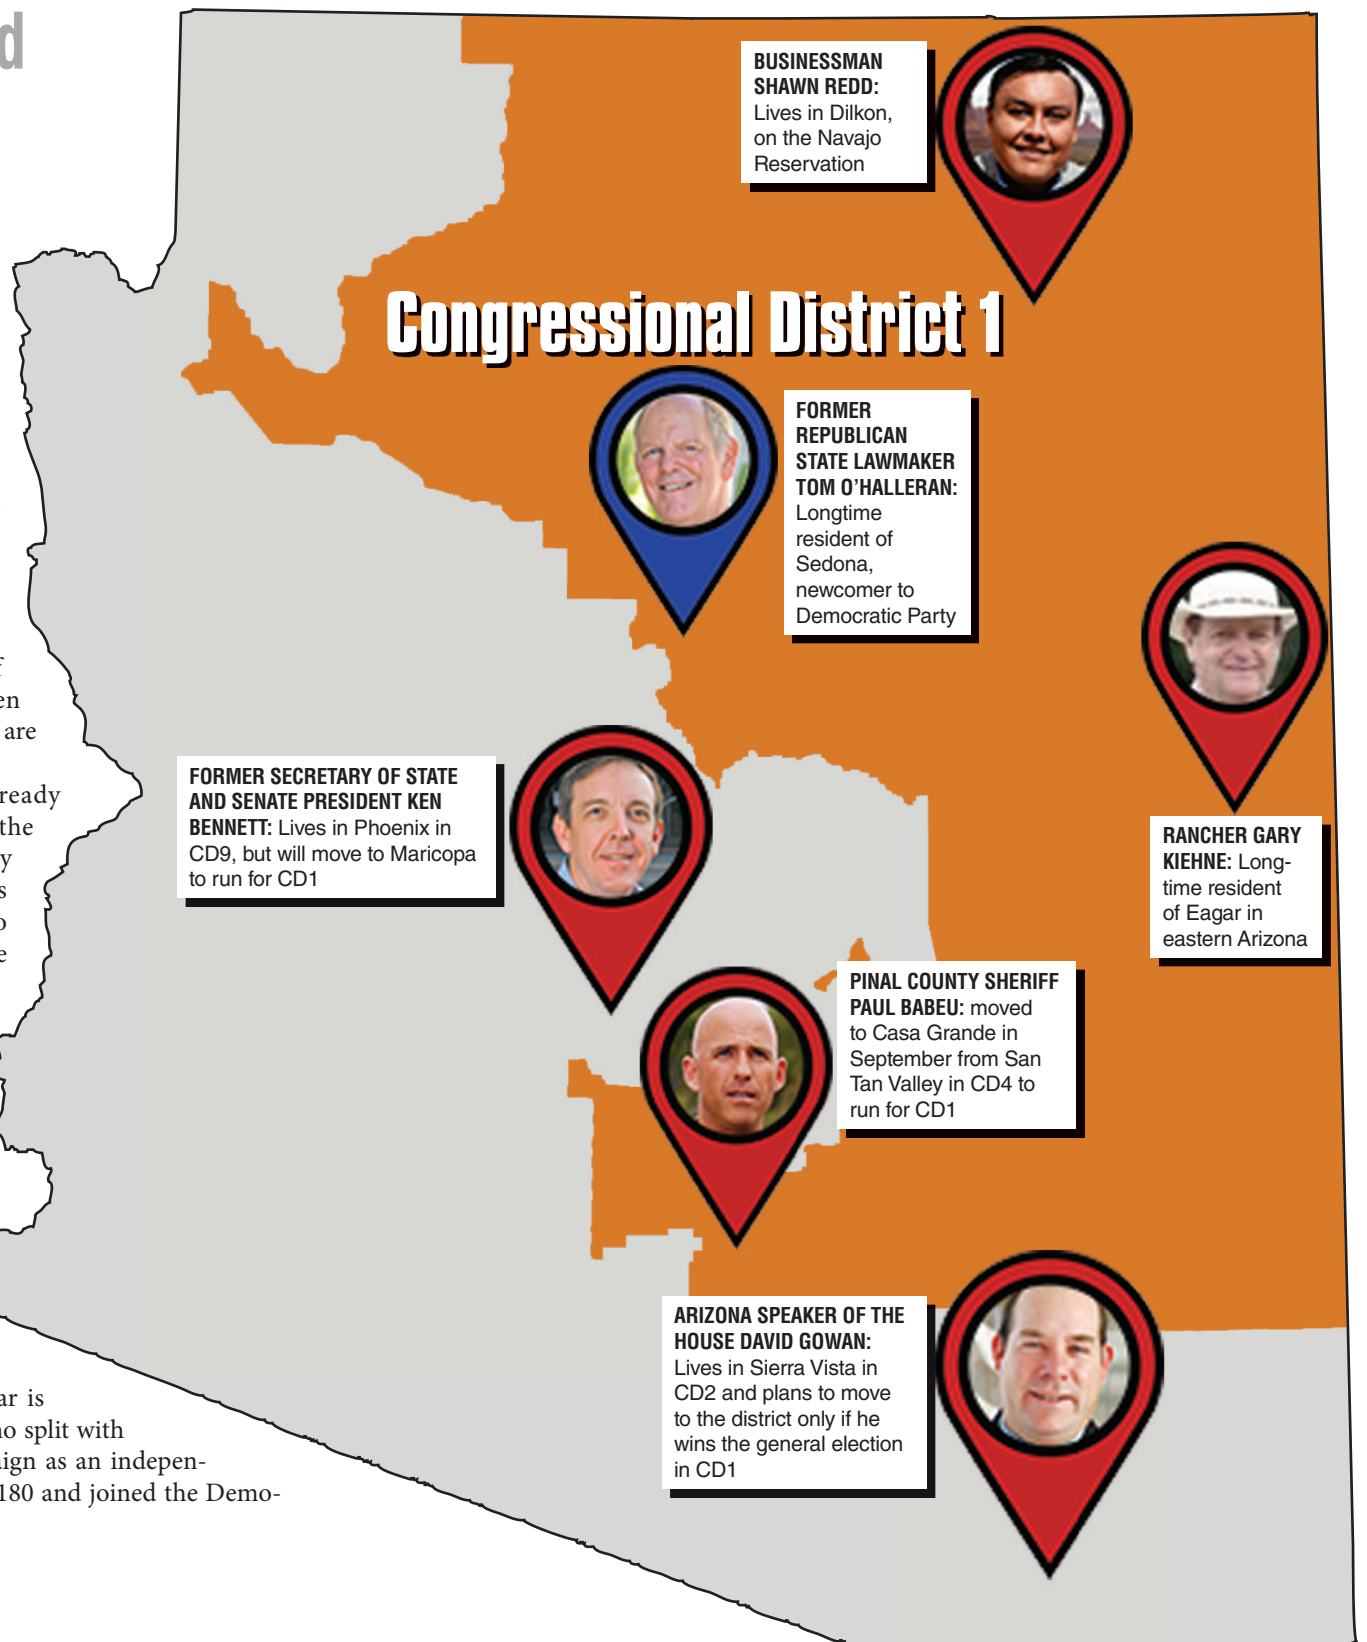

On the GOP side, five Republicans have already entered the race, most of whom didn’t live in the district when Kirkpatrick announced in May she would not seek re-election. And Democrats have largely endorsed a former Republican who switched sides to carry their party’s banner into the 2016 election.

But like all politicians who have been around the block once or twice, the top-tier candidates in CD1 all come to the race with some baggage.

On the GOP side, Pinal County Sheriff Paul Babeu, former Secretary of State Ken Bennett, House Speaker David Gowan, 2014 CD1 GOP primary contender Gary Kiehne and political newcomer Shawn Redd have all announced they will be seeking the Republican nomination to vie for Kirkpatrick’s seat.

The only Democrat to announce his run so far is former Republican lawmaker Tom O’Halloran, who split with the party in 2014 and ran an unsuccessful campaign as an independent for the state Senate. He has now done a full 180 and joined the Democratic Party.

Q&A

“If there was a clown party and I felt the clown party could bring more love and humanity to the state, I would join the clown party. I don’t care.”

Leonard Clark: Living the life of a liberal gadfly

Got a political issue and Leonard Clark has an opinion on it and he’s going to let lawmakers know what it is.

Got an office, and he’ll run for it, even if his campaign account is penniless. Clark, 51, has run for state and federal offices several times over the past two decades. He even ran for U.S. Senate while he was serving in the Army in Iraq and at the same time got demoted in connection with an opinionated blog.

He’s gunning for U.S. Sen. John McCain’s seat in 2016, but first he has to go against U.S. Rep. Ann Kirkpatrick in the Democratic primary.

Clark, who is at the Capitol on most days during the legislative session giving his liberal two-cents on legislation, and usually sporting a blue windbreaker, says he’s on a mission to retake the Democratic Party from the moderates and return it to the true progressives.

“Times are changing and changes are going to be good or bad and I’m just trying as an activist, someone who lives in Arizona, loves Arizona, to see that those changes are good,” he said.

WHEN DID POLITICS TAKE HOLD IN YOUR LIFE?

I was always interested in social studies as a kid. I was one of those geeks that likes social studies, but actually getting involved in Democratic politics and stuff was around 1998. I was married and at the time my wife did not have documentation. She does now, she’s naturalized, but the Immigration (and Naturalization Service) was out at Food City while they were taking the census and I just thought, “Wow, if you’re trying to do a census and immigration is out scaring people, they’re not going to open their doors so they can be counted.”

HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN RUNNING FOR OFFICE AND COMMENTING IN HEARINGS AT THE CAPITOL AND PHOENIX CITY COUNCIL?

I’ve always lived in gerrymandered districts, so since 1998.

HOW DO YOU DESCRIBE WHAT YOU DO POLITICALLY? ARE YOU AN ACTIVIST OR A POLITICIAN?

I’ve seen the niche, the niche is quasi activist, quasi unelected person. I don’t put myself just as an activist, but if someone said, “Are you an activist?” I’d say, “Yes, a progressive activist,” but to me it’s like a formula. I take all these little parts of the formula. If there was a clown party and I felt the clown party could bring more love and humanity to the state, I would join the clown party. I don’t care. When I go to the Legislature it’s just the lobbyists and all the big money interests, and the citizens are finding it harder and harder to speak out, so that’s what I feel my role is. I love it because I’m fighting the fight.

HAVE YOU EVER THOUGHT YOU HAD A CHANCE TO WIN ANY OF YOUR RACES OR SUCCEED ON ANY OF YOUR RECALL EFFORTS THAT YOU’VE DONE?

It depends on what your definition of winning is.

GETTING THE MOST VOTES.

As far as Governor Brewer (recall), getting 4,000 or 5,000 signatures, letting the world know not everybody liked the governor who disrespectfully put her finger in the president’s face, the world needs to see that because now it’s perception that is just as powerful. Do I really believe in my heart I have a chance? Yes, I do actually. This is an exciting time. I’ve never seen anything like it.

YOU’VE BEEN CRITICIZED BY FELLOW DEMS AND LIBERALS FOR TRYING TO DO DOOMED-FROM-THE START RECALL EFFORTS, AND ONE BLOGGER WONDERED WHETHER IT WAS BLIND PASSION OR BLIND EGOTISM? WHAT MOTIVATES YOU TO TRY TO RECALL SOMEONE LIKE GOVERNOR BREWER WITH NO MONEY AND LITTLE OR NO SUPPORT?

I know the blogger you’re talking about and I think he represents the establishment and like I stated to him, it’s better to light one candle than to curse the darkness. That’s the whole mentality of the elites in the Democratic Party, they are controlled by money and people and they don’t understand that my millennial friends and a lot of people fleeing the party and are now independents, but are really Democrats who are sick of it. When you run a campaign with “Get Ahead with Fred,” I mean pay me some money because I can come up with a better slogan than that. They don’t connect.

HOW HAVE THE LAWMAKERS AT THE STATE CAPITOL TREATED YOU?

They’re a very nice group of people, sometimes . . . I’m not going to tell you which one, and I like her, but it’s this elderly state senator, a Republican, in my opinion an extremist, right-wing ideologue, and she came within inches of my face and basically said to knock off what I’m doing. She kind of reminded me of Ma Kettle. I don’t want to get too friendly because I don’t want to get Stockholm Syndrome. For the most part, I feel pretty good except sometimes they try to cut me off.

I SEE YOU AT THE CAPITOL IN THE MIDDLE OF THE DAY AND WONDER WHY HE ISN’T AT WORK. WHAT DO YOU DO FOR A LIVING THAT ALLOWS YOU TO SPEND SO MUCH TIME AT THE CAPITOL?

I’m smiling because I’ve had people ask that and they’re wondering how’s this guy here all the time. Essentially, I sub (teach), a little bit of money comes from the VA for my knee, but I don’t need all that much to survive. I’ve seen what real poverty is and I really love this country, so I’m not suffering. I’m not missing any meals, I need to lose weight. This is my mission, I just need enough to survive. I’m very comfortable.

YOU CAN ALSO BE SPOTTED EASILY AS THE GUY WITH THE BLUE WINDBREAKER AMONG THE SUITS. WHY DON’T YOU WEAR A SUIT AND TIE TO THE CAPITOL?

I might and even if I do, I want to look Western because that’s our state. We have our own Southwestern culture, I like the bolo tie, I like that. I like to stand apart, I don’t want to be one of the suits.

WHAT DO YOU FIND MORE APPALLING, A MODERATE DEMOCRAT OR A RIGHT-WING REPUBLICAN?

In answer to that question, I feel the moderate Democrat is more dangerous — not that I find it more appalling — more dangerous. What’s worse, an enemy that you know that you can clearly see is out to destroy you and what you believe, or a wishy-washy person who claims they’re over here on your side?

WHO WOULD YOU RATE AS THE TOP POLITICIAN IN ARIZONA?

Steve Gallardo (Maricopa County supervisor and former state senator).

New lobbying firm launches

Former U.S. Rep. Ben Quayle, Rob Hobart and Rashid Hallaway announced the opening of Hobart Hallaway & Quayle Ventures, LLC, a boutique advocacy and business advisory firm.

The founding partners noted they have more than four decades of experience:

- Quayle was elected to Congress in 2010 and served two years.
- Hallaway was a staffer to former Sen. Evan Bayh of Indiana. He has experience navigating business and government procurement.
- Hobart has been a successful contract lobbyist, most recently at his own firm, Hobart Ventures. Previously he held senior positions for three members of Congress.

The new firm announced it will provide federal advocacy services to organizations in the industrial chemical, cybersecurity, defense, energy, financial services, transportation and technology industries.

The announcement notes that Quayle and Hallaway's history goes back a generation, when Hallaway's father, Bill Moreau, worked for Sen. Birch Bayh. Ben Quayle's father, Dan Quayle, won Bayh's congressional seat in the 1980 election and was elected vice president in 1988. Hallaway met Ben Quayle while he was working for a group of companies in Indiana that counted Quayle as a board member.

Greg and Pam Miller receive lifetime award

The Arizona Charter Schools Association has honored Greg and Pam Miller, founders of Challenge Charter School in Glendale

and pioneers of Arizona's charter movement, with the group's Lifetime Achievement Award. The association said the Millers' contribution to Arizona's charter schools and the state's overall education landscape extends far beyond the boundaries of their campus.

"The Millers were involved in the first conversations that led to the passage of Arizona's charter school law in 1995. Later, they collaborated with state Rep. John Allen to ask voters to allow a charter school operator to serve on the Arizona State Board for Charter Schools and State Board of Education," the association said.

"Individually, Pam Miller, who has a banking background, previously served as president of the United Parent Council and was elected to the Paradise Valley Unified School Board. Greg Miller, a retired civil engineer, currently serves as president of the Arizona State Board of Education, as well as the board's charter school representative. . . . The Millers' contributions are fueled by their passion for children and their own strong partnership, as evidenced by the celebration of their 44-year wedding anniversary."

Ducey travels to Israel

Gov. Doug Ducey is in Israel to attend an international conference on water technology and meet with business and government officials.

The governor left Arizona on Oct. 6 and returns Oct. 16.

Ducey traveled to Tel Aviv with the state's water resources director and a delegation of business and other leaders to attend the water conference.

The three-day Water Technology & Environment Control Exhibition & Conference brings together experts from Israel and other nations that are working to develop sustainable water-use solutions in a time of growing populations, industrial expansion and climate change.

Ducey also plans to meet with business leaders to discuss possible relocation to Arizona.

McKay defends approach, says he inherited DCS problems

ben.giles@azcapitoltimes.com

Officials at the Department of Child Safety know the beleaguered agency has problems, but Director Greg McKay says previous administrations are to blame.

In a memo sent Oct. 2 to child welfare organizations and other DCS stakeholders, McKay said he was well aware of many problems cited in a recent audit of his agency. The Sept. 30 report by the Auditor General's Office highlighted caseworkers' inability to properly assess whether a child's safety is at risk, resulting in instances when children are unnecessarily removed from homes.

McKay, who Gov. Doug Ducey appointed as director in February, claimed that media reports and comments from various stakeholders were an "unfair characterization" of his administration.

"Contrary to sentiments expressed in the news and by various stakeholders, the current DCS administration was not surprised by the findings, we furnished them," McKay wrote, adding that "these issues were created over time by a variety of factors and decisions of past administrations."

The agency is aggressively taking corrective action on many of the issues found in the audit, and many were in the process of being corrected before the audit began, McKay said.

He claimed his administration provided a "pre-drawn roadmap" of issues with the department's risk assessment tools, and if DCS staff could not provide auditors with direct access to the information they needed, auditors were at least pointed in the right direction. Poor documentation and subjective decision-making by caseworkers when deciding whether to remove a child from a home were the focus of the auditor general's report.

McKay also touted that, contrary to the increase of child removals from 2010 to 2014, there has been no increase in the percentage of children being removed from homes since he took control of DCS.

"We understand the public and our stakeholders have become weary of crisis and want results now," McKay wrote. "We must manage our desires for quick fixes and commit to long term sustainable changes."

Rep. Kate Brophy McGee, R-Phoenix, who serves on the Child Safety Oversight Committee that acts as a DCS watchdog, said she sympathizes with McKay, who's only been at the helm of the agency for roughly eight months.

While some lawmakers were critical of the agency's lack of progress at a recent budget hearing, Brophy McGee said the Legislature must also recognize its own role in the agency's struggles.

"It takes time to put an agency in place, and DCS has had to do that twice in less than a year. During that time, we've paradoxically cut funding to the new agency, right after we gave them additional funds. As a Legislature, we need to own that one," Brophy McGee wrote in an email.

At the very least, the transparency provided by the transitions between administrations, as well as the recent report by the Auditor General's Office, provide a more accurate window of child welfare issues that lawmakers have previously seen, Brophy McGee said. Now that problems have been identified, lawmakers should be asking McKay how they can help, whether that means more funding or legislative changes, she said.

"We are finally clearly seeing what the problems are across the agency – there are many of them, they go back a long way and they go very deep," she wrote. ☐

Chandler mom accused of spending kids' public scholarship money on shopping spree

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

A Chandler woman has been indicted on charges of spending money from a state scholarship program on a Walmart shopping spree and a family planning clinic.

Reshanett McDermott, 35, obtained roughly $2,500 by enrolling her two children into the Empowerment Scholarship Account program, which pays a parent 90 percent of what a public school would get from the state for educating a child.

Instead of sending her children to a private school or paying for learning materials, McDermott enrolled her kids in a public school for the 2014 school year and bought a television, a smart phone and two computer tablets from Walmart.

Children in the program aren't allowed to attend a public school.

She also spent $410 at Jackrabbit Family Medicine, now known as Camelback Family Planning, an abortion provider. Mia Garcia, spokeswoman for the Arizona Attorney General's Office, said investigators were blocked by medical privacy laws from knowing what she purchased at the family-planning clinic.

Garcia said if McDermott claims the purchase was legitimate under the rules of the program, then investigators would have access to the medical records.

McDermott is indicted on two counts of fraud and two counts of theft, all felonies.

Two other people have been prosecuted on misdemeanor charges of fraud since the program's inception in 2011.

The Department of Education, which administers the program, is going to ask for more money next fiscal year to make sure the students who are enrolling really exist and their parents aren't stealing from the state. Enrollment in the program has doubled every year and now stands at 2,250 students. ☐

Universities worried they'll be left behind as focus shifts to K-12

There's a growing consensus at the Capitol that Arizona needs to spend more on education, and unfortunately for the state's university system, it has been focused almost exclusively on K-12.

As the Arizona Board of Regents and higher education advocates look to recoup the sizeable cuts that higher education took in this year's budget, some worry that K-12 has sucked all the air, and more importantly, all the money out of the room. That may be a bad omen for the people who bore the biggest brunt of last session's budget crisis.

It should come as little surprise that all eyes are on Arizona's K-12 education system. The Arizona Supreme Court ruled last year that the state illegally withheld inflation-based funding increases from schools for years following the Great Recession. A second phase of that lawsuit could force the state to pony up in excess of $1 billion more to make up for past shortfalls.

Negotiations between legislative leaders and school districts to settle the lawsuit fell through over the summer, and Gov. Doug Ducey and lawmakers are scrambling for solutions. The Ninth Floor, GOP leadership, legislative Democrats and state schools Superintendent Diane Douglas are all touting competing plans for putting more money into the K-12 school system.

But while K-12 advocates were unhappy about last year's budget – Ducey and lawmakers increased funding but made cuts elsewhere in the K-12 system, leading to a total funding increase of about $81 million – their situation pales in comparison to higher education's fate in the fiscal year 2016 budget. Universities took $99 million in cuts, which represents about 13 percent of their state funding.

The state has some extra money to spend next year. The Joint Legislative Budget Committee projects a $266 million surplus, and revenues for fiscal year 2017 are expected to improve as well.

With everyone's attention at the Capitol on K-12, Chuck Coughlin, a lobbyist for the Arizona Board of Regents, said he

ARIZONA BOARD OF REGENTS 2016 LEGISLATIVE AGENDA

- RESTORE $24 MILLION of the $99 million cut in the FY16 budget.
- RESTORE ANOTHER $33.4 million of those cuts in the FY17 budget.
- $10.4 MILLION for student body growth.
- $19.2 MILLION for facility maintenance and operations.
- ONE-TIME APPROPRIATION of $75 million for capital needs.
- AUTHORIZE UNIVERSITIES to issue commercial paper and obtain commercial lines of credit, and allow them to develop independent benefits programs.

“It's not, as I said, this simple corollary that they seem to be treating higher ed as the red-headed stepchild.”

— Chuck Coughlin, a lobbyist for the Arizona Board of Regents worries that higher education will be overlooked.

“The reality is that most public attention has been focused on the K-12 system, and most political leadership is focused on that as well, while we've cut more from higher ed than any other state in the nation,” Coughlin said.

The Board of Regents is hoping for the best. At its Sept. 25 meeting, the board approved a 2016 legislative agenda that includes a request that the state use $24 million from its projected FY16 surplus to offset last session's cuts, and the replacement of another $33.4 million from those reductions in the FY17 budget.

Board of Regents Chairman Jay Heiler said K-12 schools should be at the forefront of the state's attention. But higher education is also important, and he warned against using an “either/or” approach to funding K-12 schools and universities.

“We are simply seeking restoration in light of the state's improved fiscal position and we are seeking to continue the conversation about the state's partnership with its higher ed institutions,” Heiler said.

Ducey originally proposed $75 million in cuts to the university system, but that number jumped to $99 million during budget negotiations with the Legislature. Based on the better-than-expected revenue situation, the board said it was unnecessary to increase that cut.

In addition, the regents want $10.4 million to cover the costs of student body growth, $19.2 million for facility maintenance and operations and a one-time request of $75 million for capital needs such as fire alarms, roofing and asbestos removal. The University of Arizona also wants $8 million for its Arizona Veterinary Medicine program.

PULLED IN DIFFERENT DIRECTIONS

Heiler is correct that the state's fiscal situation has improved. But the extra revenue that state expects is likely to be pulled in a lot of different directions.

Legislative Democrats and education advocates have called for a special session of the Legislature so that money can be immediately pumped into the K-12 system, and many expect most surplus cash to go to the schools. Meanwhile, the beleaguered Department of Child Safety is asking the state for an additional $105.6 million in FY17, along with $65.5 million more for the current fiscal year.

Daniel Scarpinato, a spokesman for Ducey, indicated that the Ninth Floor's view is that universities will have to wait in line. He said resolving the lawsuit and putting more money into K-12 education are the governor's top priorities for next session.

In terms of the larger budget picture, Scarpinato emphasized that there are numerous other priorities that must be addressed as well. He also stressed the importance of ensuring that the state's budget is structurally balanced.

“There are a lot of priorities, whether it's education, whether it's child safety, whether it's public safety. All of these need to be viewed through both the resources available and the total budget. I think as we move into that process there will be more information,” Scarpinato said.

For the university system, there are more solutions than just funding. The additional money is a key component of the regents' wish list for 2016. But they are also hoping Ducey and the Legislature will allow them more flexibility to develop benefits programs independent of the state, issue commercial paper and obtain commercial lines of credit. If the state won't invest in higher education, Coughlin said, it should free up the universities to find their own solutions.

“That's the logical step there, that if you're going to continue to cut there, again, more than any other state in the Union, then free up the enterprise. Let us succeed on our own, because it's a critically important mission for the future of the state's economy. If the state doesn't want to do it, then let the leadership of the university system do it,” Coughlin said.

According to Coughlin's lobbying firm, HighGround, which represents the Board of Regents, those proposals are expected to bring “significant savings” to the university system. But the board is still figuring out exactly how much those savings will be. A press statement the board issued about its 2016 agenda indicated that it expects the Health Insurance Trust Fund changes to provide about $8 million.

Coughlin acknowledged that there are no easy solutions for fixing the university system. But what the state did last session is not it.

“It's not, as I said, this simple corollary that they seem to be treating higher ed as the red-headed stepchild. I can't cut anybody else, so I'm going to cut them,” he said. ■

State could have $650 million balance by fiscal 2017, panel reports

LUIGI DEL PUERTO

luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Arizona is on track to collect revenues not seen since before the beginning of the Great Recession, according to a forecast by a group of economists advising state policymakers.

The Finance Advisory Committee predicted that revenues would grow by 4 percent in each of the next two years.

By FY2017, Arizona's finances would be structurally balanced – meaning ongoing spending is below or at a par with ongoing revenues. If projections are realized, Arizona's government could be staring at a $650 million cash balance by that year, not counting the rainy day fund.

But Joint Legislative Budget Committee Director Richard Stavneak urged policymakers to resist what he anticipates to be heavy political pressure to spend the money on permanent programs, whether they are tax cuts or spending increases.

“You could very easily unbalance the budget again, depending on the actions that you take,” he warned, urging policymakers to take to heart the lessons of the last recession, when revenues spiked and the state spent one-time monies, leading to years of incessant cuts when the economy crashed.

Additionally, the projections do not take into account the pending K-12 inflation lawsuit, where, under the worst scenario, the state could be ordered to pay schools about $260 million more each year, counting the roughly $75 million lawmakers have allocated for inflation.

Perhaps more worrisome is the potential for another recession in this decade.

Economic expansions have a life cycle, and since 1945, they've run for roughly 59 months on the average. They have gotten longer (about 95 months on the average) in the past few decades. The last one, which ran from 2001 to 2007, lasted 73 months.

But the current expansion is already 75 months, which makes economists worry that an economic downturn — hopefully a mild one — is due soon.

Economist Jim Rounds said policymakers should pay close attention to trends in major economic indicators, adding that an economic downturn is “a very likely event” this decade.

Sen. Don Shooter, R-Yuma, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said the best course of action is not to make dramatic changes on either the spending or revenue side.

“Right now, we don't need to fool with either side of that equation. We don't need heavy tax cuts. We don't need heavy expenditure increases. Sit still. Keep steady as she goes,” he said. ■

It's time for Arizona to embrace the Clean Power Plan

DANIELLA SMITH

Recently, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency issued a final rule to reduce carbon pollution from existing power plants known as the Clean Power Plan. This plan gives states the guidance they need to create their own framework to limit carbon pollution. While the final rule is not as rigid as opponents expected, they still claim that the plan requirements are too expensive and will harm Arizona's economy. However, the EPA estimates for every dollar invested, roughly seven dollars' worth of health benefits will be realized.

For the Arizona Public Health Association, climate change is not a political issue, it's a health issue. There are two main ways climate change can affect human health: first, by changing the frequency or severity of health problems that are already linked to weather and climate; and second, by producing unforeseen health problems in places where they have not occurred before.

Older adults and people who work outdoors have a greater risk of dying due to increased intensity, duration and frequency of heat waves. People who are socially isolated, economically disadvantaged and those with chronic illnesses are also at higher risk of death or illness. Increasing temperatures will allow more ground level ozone to form. Hotter, drier weather raises particulate pollution due to more wind-blown dust and wildfires. Higher temperatures may allow plants to release more allergens. All of these pollutants creep indoors and worsen respiratory and cardiovascular diseases, causing increased hospital visits, lost school and workdays, and premature deaths. Rising temperatures and weather extremes are expected to increase the incidence and distribution of pests, parasites and microbes. This will lead to higher use of pesticides to protect crops and animals, resulting in more human exposure to chemical contaminants in the food chain. More extreme weather events such as droughts and hurricanes may disrupt distribution of food, leading to food shortages, damage, spoilage or contamination. Mosquito and water-borne diseases are expected to become more prevalent as the world gets warmer. Unfortunately, these are just a few of the projected health effects from climate change.

In order to truly minimize the effects of the overwhelming evidence of rapidly occurring climate change, we need a sensible path over the next few decades to replace most fossil fuel sources of energy including coal, oil and natural gas. Alternatives include energy efficiency and clean energy sources like solar and wind.

It's time for Arizona to embrace the Clean Power Plan, to transition away from practices that are harmful to the air we breathe and work towards a cleaner, healthier environment for all of us. After all, what's more important than health?

— Daniella Smith is executive director of the Arizona Public Health Association.

ASU's Public Service Academy is a model that must be emulated

JONATHAN KOPPELL

Michael Crow and his wife Sybil Francis recently made headlines for their donation of $1.2 million to fund an Arizona State University program to train the next generation of leaders. The Public Service Academy is the first of its kind in the nation.

But the Arizona State University president has done more than “put his money where his mouth is” commitment in our 6,000 students who aspire as “NBC Today Show” anchor Matt Lauer put it. Through his actions since becoming the leader of ASU in 2002, Crow has repositioned the nation's largest public university as an exemplar of public service.

As dean of the College of Public Service and Community Solutions in downtown Phoenix, I see the same commitment in our 6,000 students who aspire to make a difference in public service professions. Some will work in the criminal justice system, become social workers, public administrators or enter the field of parks and recreation. Many plan on careers in the non-profit sector or the emerging fields of sustainable tourism or emergency management and homeland security. College education for them is not merely about maximizing income as some analysts of higher education

Don't give up on DCS yet! The agency needs inspiring leadership

TIMOTHY SCHMALTZ

Dear Legislature: Don't give up on Arizona's children and the Department of Child Safety yet, please.

At a recent Joint Legislative Budget Committee meeting, legislators expressed disappointment and dismay, combined with a little disgust and anger, about the lack of progress being made under the leadership of the governor's choice for Department of Child Safety, Director Greg McKay. Sen. John Kavanagh said the Department of Child Safety needs a "retired seasoned professional administrator" to oversee Director McKay.

The child welfare community has expressed frustration with McKay and the department for some time now. His current command and control style has alienated staff and many in the community, and has generated a culture of fear while yielding few positive results. Current DCS leadership seems to be more focused on blaming the past rather than inspiring change and pragmatically spending money the Legislature appropriated for in-home services and full DCS staffing.

All the frustration does not address the ongoing chaos of the rising foster care caseload, growing demand for services, persistent growth in the backlog of cases, massive staff turnover and caseload churn. Community agencies report some of their staff is leaving children's work because of how they are being treated by DCS.

We don't question McKay's convictions, dedication or his sincere desire to protect children. He is reportedly a good man. But these good qualities do not seem adequate to the task of building a new agency for protecting children and serving families, when even a supportive legislator calls McKay and his leadership team into question. This ineffective management is now jeopardizing more resources and much needed reforms at the DCS.

The department's new budget request is laudable for what it includes, but also questionable for what it is missing and certainly demands scrutiny. Stabilizing a qualified highly trained professional workforce must be a first priority. The huge turnover rate exceeding 35 percent is costly and unacceptable. Stopping this huge caseload and workload churn is essential to addressing quality work and expedited permanency planning for the huge numbers of children and families who need help.

The Legislature needs to recognize and honor the dignity, complexity, and professional nature of the child welfare work itself in DCS and in the community. We estimate that front line child welfare salaries need to increase by at least $10,000 per position to help retain staff, stabilize the workforce, reduce caseloads and get on with effective permanency planning for children and their families. This same formula holds true for community provider agencies that also need to keep highly trained staff to provide the prevention and therapeutic healing services needed to help families thrive.

More targeted funding is needed to stabilize the workforce. But to have actual impact it will need inspiring, professional, effective leadership – as Senator Kavanagh noted should be a condition of more funding.

Political leadership comes and goes, as we have seen. Only a dedicated highly accountable trained professional staff with adequate resources and tools grounded in best practices can insure sustained quality services and safety for children and families.

Legislators understand what is needed. But their frustration, distrust, and anger must not stop further reforms and funding. The governor must lead with urgency to provide proven, inspirational, knowledgeable, and effective leadership to achieve authentic positive results for Arizona's most vulnerable children.

The current false starts, struggling leadership, and lack of results must not prevent the governor and Legislature from trying again and again until they get it right.

would have us believe but about preparation for a life of meaning and impact. And as our Public Service Academy students representing forty-nine different majors across the university demonstrate, this is not an impulse limited to the College of Public Service.

ASU's mission of making a high-quality college education accessible is one manifestation of its dedication to public service. At ASU, we take pride not in whom we exclude but whom we include and how they succeed. This benefits not just the students and their families but the all of us. My college offers a good example.

Half of our incoming freshmen are first generation college students and two-thirds of students are Pell grant eligible. We have the highest percentage of veteran students and the highest percentage of underrepresented minority students. Indeed, almost half of our students are minority.

They are taught by professors who are addressing pressing issues that face our community — another component of ASU's public service mission — through their research and engagement with community partners. Our criminology and criminal justice professors conduct groundbreaking research that is allowing police forces here and nationwide to better for local governments to better serve their citizens more efficiently. And this extends across campus.

ASU is committed to serving our country by contributing to the national defense. The Public Service Academy itself links together students in the new Next Generation Service Corps with our robust Reserve Officer Training Corps program. The design is intended to produce outstanding civilian and military leaders who are prepared to work collaboratively in the complex environments they are encountering. But the relationship to national defense runs far deeper. ASU carries out classified research that prepares the nation's military and intelligence agencies for emerging threats and keeps our forces on the vanguard of technological innovation in ways that protect lives and deter violence.

I have spent time with the academy's first cohort of students. And I have to tell you that their commitment to bettering our communities, our country and our world is impressive. Many have a deep desire to make our communities better and we can learn from them.

They may lack the knowledge and preparation to make a difference — that is precisely why we created the Public Service Academy — but they represent the confidence that solutions to our most vexing challenges can be found if we are committed to doing so.

That's why ASU's public service mission is so important. Yes, we want to produce professionals who can have successful and rewarding careers. But we also expect our graduates to understand the significant role they can play in solving the issues that confound us today. Sybil Francis and Michael Crow have made a huge financial donation to the Public Service Academy but the bigger contribution is the re-affirmation that what makes a university truly public is its purpose. Arizona State University exemplifies what it means to be a public service university in the 21st century. If we are to advance as a state and nation, it is model that must be emulated.

Thorny issues face group mulling police body camera legislation

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

Republican Sen. John Kavanagh said when he was a cop on the beat in New York City during the 1970s, he would never have engaged in felony destruction of evidence.

But there may have been a time, back in the early 1970s, when a “hypothetical” officer might have turned a corner in Manhattan and bumped into a pair of teenagers smoking a joint.

“That officer might have grabbed that joint and started talking to those two kids,” Kavanagh said. “And after three or four minutes of conversation, that officer may have decided that these two kids weren’t bad kids, they were just stupid kids who were smoking a joint and shouldn’t be arrested and fingerprinted and had their lives ruined. And that hypothetical cop may have just taken that joint and shredded it and told the kids ‘get out of here.’”

But if that hypothetical cop had been wearing a body camera, as many cops are required to wear today, he would have had no choice but to go “by the book” and bring those kids in to jail for a minor offense that would have serious consequences on their lives, Kavanagh, a Fountain Hills Republican, said.

That’s just one of the many thorny issues Kavanagh is trying to sort out on a legislative study committee dedicated to discussing the pros and cons of body

BENEFITS AND CHALLENGES

Police officers have mixed opinions about body cameras, according to Phoenix Police Assistant Chief Michael Kurtenbach, who is responsible for overseeing the department’s body camera program, which was first implemented in 2011.

Kurtenbach said the cameras can provide significant benefits for both cops and citizens, but the new technology also presents many challenges.

The cameras provide increased transparency, and help cut through divergent views of a disputed incident. That protects citizens from police misconduct and police from false allegations from the public.

Kurtenbach said that while the Phoenix Police Department doesn’t require every cop wear a body camera, the number of police using them is increasing, as is the number of departments nationwide that use body cameras. And that trend has some officers pushing back, saying requiring that a constantly-running camera be strapped to their chest while they work is an invasion of privacy that could lead to all sorts of problems.

But following last year’s high-profile officer-involved shooting of Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri, Kurtenbach said the attitude of Phoenix police toward body cameras started to change.

“Officers started coming to me saying ‘When do I get a camera? I want a camera.’ That was a distinct paradigm shift,” he said.

cameras, and finding policy proposals regarding them.

The committee, which is made up of law enforcement and criminal defense officials, members of the media and lawmakers, had its first meeting on Oct. 7. It mulled over the issue of police body cameras in preparation for legislation Kavanagh expects will be introduced next year.

The idea of mandating police body cameras has been around for years, but the push to get more officers equipped with the cameras has “received a shot of steroids,” Kavanagh said, because of the high profile shootings by police against unarmed African-American men.

Last year, Democratic Rep. Reginald Bolding of Laveen, the only African-American member of the Legislature, introduced a bill to require all police in the state to wear body cameras, saying the legislation would provide “mutual protection for our community members and the police.” The bill was never assigned to a committee.

At the time, Kavanagh said he opposed mandatory use of body cameras. He countered with his own bill dictating when body cameras can be used and stating the footage is not subject to public records laws. That bill was scrapped in favor of a study committee.

He said his bill to prohibit the body camera footage from being subject to public records requests attempted to ensure that police and citizens’ privacy was respected, but he later realized that the issue wasn’t that simple.

“The more I dug into the issue, the more I realized how complicated it was,” he said.

At the study committee’s first meeting, Kavanagh said that as an ex-cop who also holds a Ph.D. in criminal justice, he understands the benefits of body cameras for both police and the public. That includes making both parties behave more civilly and settle disputes over the use of force and complaints against the police.

But as a lawmaker, he realizes that forcing police to use body cameras would likely have unintended effects.

“If you put a camera on and walk up to talk to someone, I think they react a lot differently to you. It’s no longer ‘Hi Officer Friendly, let’s chat.’ It’s no longer, ‘Hey, I want to tell you about this suspicious activity down the street.’ Now suddenly it’s a very official, very public, very forever recorded situation,” Kavanagh said.

A study of Phoenix’s body camera pilot program conducted by Arizona State University shows that wearing a camera can have distinct advantages for police. Since the department implemented body cameras in one precinct, complaints against police there dropped by more than 22 percent. Meanwhile, complaints against police increased 45 percent citywide. At the same time, in the precinct with body cameras, the number of complaints found to be baseless increased significantly over citywide statistics.

But the cameras also have drawbacks, both for police and citizens, Phoenix Police Assistant Chief Michael Kurtenbach said.

Police are concerned that their bosses will have a running feed of every little move they make, which could be used against them by a vindictive overseer who is looking for any excuse fire them.

Another potential drawback is the loss of privacy. Police don’t show up when someone is having a good day, Kurtenbach said, and more often interact with the public when citizens are having some of the worst moments of their lives – moments that will be captured on camera, available to the public via state public records laws and possibly put online for the whole world to view.

And Kurtenbach noted that the cameras can damage relationships with the community police serve, as members of the public are less likely to tip off police to problems in the neighborhood if they know they are being recorded. He said police department policies should give cops leeway to use discretion when to turn the cameras off, at least during times when police are not involved in enforcement activities.

“We want our officers to get out and engage in non-enforcement contacts. We want them to go to parks when they’re available, to go to senior centers and community centers to interact with the public. If there’s a mandate that the camera must be on during all those interactions, it’s hard to build relationships,” he said.

Another challenge for many police departments that want to implement body cameras is they can be expensive, both in the up-front costs for the cameras and the ongoing costs for additional staff and digital storage space to hold the footage.

A fiscal note on Bolding’s bill shows that strapping a body camera on every cop in the state would cost somewhere between $18.3 million and $22.7 million for the first year, with additional ongoing data storage costs of as much as $11.5 million to $14.4 million per year after that. And that estimate doesn’t take into account the ongoing personnel costs associated with the change for county and local cops.

Kurtenbach said evidence suggests body cameras already in use by the Phoenix Police Department do lead to cops being less likely to give citizens breaks.

The number of arrests has also increased in the precinct using body cameras studied by ASU, a spike that could be tied to officers feeling they don’t have the option of providing some leeway with, for example, a pair of otherwise good teenagers smoking a joint on the street. ☐

Congratulations Representative Warren Petersen for being selected to receive this award for your favorable treatment and understanding of Arizona’s commercial real estate tax system and the effects of overregulation and taxation. You have shown strong leadership for positive change. Warren showed exemplary leadership by striking the language of Senate Bill 1241 and introducing language that stopped excessive government oversight that would have had devastating impacts to the building community.

We are thrilled to have this opportunity to acknowledge the wonderful performance and commitment of Representative Warren Petersen. We thank you for all you have done to uphold our constitutional rights.

State schools chief offers proposals for 2016 session

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

The first proposals Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Douglas will push as legislation in the 2016 session would allow Native American students to cross state lines for school and the Department of Education to license its new data system.

Douglas introduced her list of goals on Oct. 1. It consists of several ideas gathered from parents, teachers and school administrators she met with on a tour last spring.

The proposals run the gamut from infusing $400 million immediately into the public school system for teachers' salaries to providing tax breaks for teachers and schools in underserved areas to eliminating Common Core.

Douglas spokesman Charles Tack said one of the first proposals the department will try to turn into law would allow for an "Enterprise Fund," or the ability to license the various information technology products the department has created.

For example, since 2011 the state has been building the Arizona Education Learning Accountability System to replace antiquated equipment. The part that counts students and calculates money to be disbursed to public school systems began operating this year.

The Legislature appropriated $5 million each for fiscal years 2012 and 2013 and $10 million in federal grants in those years for

— Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Douglas

AELAS. Lawmakers earmarked $7 million in fiscal year 2014 for AELAS and in fiscal year 2015 gave the department $12 million.

Tack said Arizona Education Data Standards, or AZEDS, the student-counting component of AELAS, has generated national attention because of the way it streamlines the process of counting students and lining up finances.

"Nobody has built a system like that before," he said. "That's been built from the ground up and we feel like it could be a game changer and I think other states would look at it the same way."

He said the department hasn't reached a conclusive estimate on how much revenue licensing AELAS or other department developed property would generate, but any revenue would offset the costs of finishing the system.

"We would be looking at a considerable amount of money because I think these would be sought after," Tack said. "We haven't done a close analysis but we would be thinking this could bring in hundreds of thousands and probably millions of dollars if we were able to start licensing some of these products."

The other proposal likely to make it to the Legislature would allow children on Indian lands such as the Navajo Nation to cross state lines to attend school. Tack said there are many Navajo students who live in New Mexico, for example, but are closer to a school in Arizona and are bused on sometimes treacherous roads for long hours to get to school.

Tack said the idea is to come up with a way to work with Arizona's neighboring states so the money follows the student.

"It gets a little more complicated because students are funded in different ways in different states and that's why we have to work very closely with the other state leaders, county supervisors here, with state legislators here, state legislators there," Tack said.

He said there are Arizona students who are closer to schools in other states too.

But pundits have been skeptical of the plan's success because of Douglas' feud with the State Board of Education and tiffs she's had with Gov. Doug Ducey.

Douglas said differences don't have to block progress.

"I am absolutely confident, I know I am always willing and able to work with people on the issues of education in Arizona and I am absolutely confident as long as everybody else keeps that first and foremost in their minds we'll put our political differences aside," she said.

Tack said Douglas has good relationships in the Legislature, and he singled out Sen. Carlyle Begay, D-Ganado, as someone who has been supportive and involved in her tours of Indian reservations.

Begay was the most successful Democrat in terms of getting legislation passed in 2015. He sponsored three of the six Democrat bills signed into law.

Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix, said he doesn't think Douglas' proposals are dead on arrival, despite her feuds.

"It depends on the merit of the policy. If Diane is putting out good policy I'll support it without a doubt," Boyer said.

Tack said he expects Douglas to firm up her legislative agenda after she completes a tour of the state gathering feedback on her proposals.

Panel to explore future of State Bar

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

An ad hoc committee focused on the future of the State Bar of Arizona is set to meet Oct. 19.

The committee's formation comes after another legislative session in which lawmakers tried to dismantle the Bar, which regulates lawyers.

Rep. Anthony Kern, a Glendale Republican, is leading the committee and in the last session introduced HB2629, a measure that would have freed attorneys from required membership in the Bar and turned over attorney regulation to the Arizona Supreme Court.

The bill failed on the House floor on a 29-30 vote, with seven Republicans joining the Democratic caucus. Similar bills in 2013 never got a hearing, but the thinking among many lawmakers has persisted that no one should be forced to join an organization to work.

Several lawmakers in support of dismantling the Bar compare the mandatory membership to forcing someone to join a labor union, which in Arizona is not legal.

Kern did not immediately return a call seeking comment. Kern said in advo-

Arizona ruling paves way for redistricting proposals in other states

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

The U.S. Supreme Court's ruling that upheld the authority of the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission to draw congressional boundaries is reverberating far beyond the confines of the Grand Canyon State.

Advocates of independent redistricting in several other states had eagerly awaited the court's June 29 ruling. While movements were already afoot across the country, many have picked up momentum since the high court ruled that authorizing independent commissions to draw congressional boundaries doesn't violate the elections clause of the U.S. Constitution.

Those who wanted independent commissions to draw their state's congressional boundaries had been hampered for three years by the counterargument from opponents that the Supreme Court might rule that the Constitution reserves that right exclusively for state legislatures, as Arizona's Republican lawmakers argued. Now, the court has taken that argument off the table.

When the Supreme Court announced in 2014 that it would take the Arizona redistricting case, it threw up a roadblock for independent redistricting advocates across the country, especially in states where such undertakings would require costly ballot measure campaigns, said Michael Li, an attorney with the New York University School of Law's Brennan Center, which champions independent redistricting, among other issues. The court's ruling in June changed that.

"Since then, I think people have felt a lot more confident moving forward," Li said.

In several states, including Ohio, Michigan, Florida, Virginia and Illinois, advocates are already looking to capitalize on the court's opinion.

In Ohio, voters will decide in November whether to create an independent commission that will draw the state's legislative districts. The proposal has widespread support, including from the perennial swing state's Democratic and Republican parties. But the proposed amendment to the state's Constitution won't affect the way Ohio draws its congressional lines.

Frank LaRose, a Republican state senator from Copley, Ohio, said lawmakers considered including congressional redistricting in the proposal they approved last year, but opted against it because of the uncertainty created by the Arizona Legislature's lawsuit. Now that the uncertainty is gone, he and a Democratic colleague, state Sen. Tom Sawyer, have co-sponsored a plan to ask voters to approve a congressional redistricting commission in the 2016 general election.

"That was the argument that won the day – better safe than sorry. Let's figure out what the court's going to do," LaRose said. "So now I've come back this summer after the court's decision and said, along with my co-sponsor, Senator Sawyer ... and we said this Arizona question's been decided now, so let's move forward with congressional redistricting as well."

Michigan state Rep. Jon Hoadley, a Kalamazoo Democrat, is also hoping the Supreme Court's decision will kick-start the conversation about independent redistricting in his state. Hoadley has advocated for independent redistricting for years, both for legislative and congressional districts. He and a colleague have introduced a bill to refer the issue to Michigan's voters. Hoadley said they were ready to move on the bill in January, but held off until the Supreme Court weighed in.

"The Supreme Court ruling is putting this issue front and center, where in the past redistricting had been a more academic conversation," Hoadley said. "When we saw the Arizona decision upheld the work of everyday people's ability to change the system in Arizona, I think that's what ultimately empowered this conversation here in Michigan."

Dwight Dudley, a Democratic state representative in Florida, is hoping to get his colleagues to approve his proposal to send independent redistricting to the ballot as well, which he began touting almost immediately after the Supreme Court's ruling. The St. Petersburg attorney spoke several times with Colleen Mathis, the independent chair of the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission, about her experiences with redistricting while he worked on his proposal.

"The fact that a truly independent commission was affirmed by the highest court in the land certainly makes it a little better, a little easier, a little more timely to maybe go forward with this. It certainly has created plenty of buzz and interest," Dudley said.

Dudley and Hoadley were both skeptical about the chances of getting their proposals through their respective legislatures – both are Democrats in Republican-controlled legislatures – but hoped that citizen initiatives would refer the issues to the ballot if lawmakers decline to do so. The odds are better in Ohio, where lawmakers already sent one independent redistricting measure to the ballot, though LaRose said he expects a citizen group to take up the issue if the Legislature won't.

In other states, independent redistricting advocates have a tougher hill to climb. In Virginia, constitutional amendments not only must be referred by the state's General Assembly, but must be done twice, in successive legislative sessions, with an intervening election between them.

Nonetheless, Brian Cannon, executive director of One Virginia 2021, is optimistic that attitudes are changing. Cannon said a Supreme Court ruling against Arizona's IRC may not have had any legal bearing on his group's independent redistricting proposal in Virginia, because the Arizona Legislature's attorneys argued that a citizen initiative couldn't create an independent commission, but the Legislature could exercise the same power. But he said he's hopeful that the Supreme Court's ruling will still help propel independent redistricting forward in his state.

Cannon said he has seen more interest and enthusiasm for the movement since the Supreme Court ruling.

"All across the country it's big for the movement," he said. "For talking points and general momentum and changing the zeitgeist on this, it's been tremendous."

A campaign called the Independent Map Amendment is collecting signatures to refer a legislative redistricting issue to the ballot in Illinois. But due to the Illinoisans' limited ability to use citizen initiatives – the state Constitution only allows them for proposals to change the structure and procedures of the Legislature – only lawmakers can refer a congressional redistricting commission measure to the ballot.

Cindi Canary, the executive director of the Independent Map Amendment, said if voters approve a legislative redistricting commission, it could put pressure on the Legislature to do the same for congressional boundaries.

"If we are able to change the way that we draw state maps and the sky doesn't drop, which it will not, I think that will give us a lot of momentum," Canary said.

Just because a commission is independent of the Legislature doesn't necessarily mean it's devoid of partisanship. The Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission was plagued by accusations of Democratic bias, and most of its important votes were 3-2, with Mathis, the independent chair, voting with the commission's two Democrats, with the two Republicans almost always in the minority.

And while Arizona and the Supreme Court's ruling have inspired independent redistricting advocates across the country, many are hoping to avoid some of the pitfalls that Arizona has faced. The Michigan, Ohio and Virginia proposals all would require minority party votes to implement a new map. Ohio's proposed legislative redistricting commission – the congressional version, if approved, would be the same – would be composed of a Republican and Democrat from each legislative chamber, along with the state's governor, secretary state and state auditor, guaranteeing the minority party at least two of the seven seats. And to pass a map, the commission would need at least two votes from the minority party.

LaRose, the co-sponsor of the Ohio congressional redistricting proposal, said it's naïve to believe that such a commission can be completely nonpartisan.

"There aren't really going to be any nonpartisan or completely independent or unbiased individuals. Let's just put Republicans and Democrats in the room and force them to reach a compromise on this, and put some guardrails around it to prevent partisan excess," he said. Herald-Examiner

CONGRESSIONAL REDISTRICTING COMMISSION PROPOSALS IN OTHER STATES

Florida: State auditor general selects pool of applicants based on strict criteria, with the number of applicants to be determined by state law. Democrats and Republicans and independents or members of minor parties must each make up a third of the pool. Majority and minority parties from each legislative chamber can strike an equal number of applicants from the pool. Auditor general randomly selects from among remaining members, with Democrats, Republicans and independents/minor parties each getting one-third. Bill sponsor proposes 11-member commission with four Democrats, four Republicans and three others.

Michigan: Fourteen-member commission would have five Democrats, five Republicans and four independents. At least three votes from each faction would be required to pass a redistricting plan.

Ohio: Seven-member commission would have one Democrat and one Republican from each of the state's two legislative chambers, along with the governor, secretary of state and state auditor. At least two votes from the minority party required to pass a redistricting plan. A proposed legislative redistricting plan that will be on the November 2015 ballot would have the same structure.

Virginia: One Virginia 2021 advocates a system similar to a 2015 proposal for legislative redistricting that would have created a seven-member commission with one Democrat and one Republican appointed by each of the state's two legislative chambers, with three independent members chosen by the state's auditor of public accounts, inspector general and executive director of the Virginia State Bar. A redistricting plan could not pass if both Democrats or both Republicans vote against it.

APS

Investor group says subpoena would violate First Amendment

RACHEL LEINGANG

rachel.leingang@azcapitoltimes.com

Issuing a subpoena to force disclosure of potential Arizona Public Service election spending opens up a host of legal and policy issues, a utility investor group is arguing.

The Arizona Investment Council, which advocates for utility investors, commissioned an assessment from attorney Mary O'Grady of a potential subpoena's legal issues.

Arizona Corporation Commissioner Bob Burns said he plans to subpoena APS to force the utility to disclose what it spent on the 2014 Corporation Commission elections as a way to test the commission's authority. Some of his fellow commissioners think issuing a subpoena would hinder free speech and falls outside the commission's authority.

More than $3 million was spent to support the successful 2014 campaigns of Commissioners Tom Forese and Doug Little, and many suspect some or all of that money came from APS or its parent company, Pinnacle West. The utility has not confirmed or denied the spending. Last month, the solar advocacy group The Alliance for Solar Choice enlisted former Arizona Supreme Court Justice Thomas Zlaket to parse the commission's authority on utility electioneering disclosure. Zlaket determined the commission, and each individual commissioner, has solid legal footing.

"Commissioners must be able to discover the relationships that their colleagues have with regulated entities and their parent companies because commissioners engage in public deliberations having significant ramifications for Arizona citizens," Zlaket wrote.

But not so fast, the Arizona Investment Council and O'Grady rebutted in a filing Oct. 2.

Gary Yaquinto, president of the Arizona Investment Council, said the organization isn't so much concerned with the particular APS electioneering disclosure issue, but the precedent it could set.

"It's not just for elections. ... It could have to do with a host of subjects that are just simply not related to the commission's jurisdiction. That's what we fear," Yaquinto told the Arizona Capitol Times.

Yaquinto said he didn't have information on whether APS would fight a potential subpoena from Burns, but said "it wouldn't surprise me to see a court challenge if a subpoena is issued."

In the filing, O'Grady cautioned that a subpoena would be outside the bounds of the commission's constitutional purpose and would go against the First Amendment. Retroactively requiring disclosure would "encourage an atmosphere of distrust, suspicion, and threats of investigation," O'Grady wrote.

Investigating a public service corporation's electioneering doesn't relate to the function of the commission, she said, though she conceded that the commission may have authority, within a rate case, to ask APS if ratepayer money was used to fund elections.

A subpoena would amount to a "selective, retroactive expansion of campaign finance disclosure" and would violate a corporation's free speech rights. In the U.S. Supreme Court's Citizens United decision, the court set up three reasons for election spending disclosure. They are: to gather data to find potential violations of contribution caps, to stop corruption or the appearance of it, and to give voters information in advance of an election. In this case, none of those three justifications fit, O'Grady argues.

"Retroactive disclosure requirements pose a real risk of chilling speech, because political spenders would no longer be able to rely on current law when making expenditure decisions," she wrote.

Since the subpoena contemplated by Burns would look at 2014 election spending, it wouldn't provide useful information for voters, O'Grady said.

"Voters may be curious about political expenditures on previous elections, but satisfying that curiosity does not inform voters with information that will assist them in casting their votes," she wrote.

And while the commission's integrity is important, subpoenaing a regulated entity would actually hurt the commission more, she argues.

"Whatever benefit that added 'context' supplies is outweighed by the prospect of frequent, divisive investigations that could impede the commission's substantive work," O'Grady wrote.

Instead, if there are concerns with election spending at the commission, policymakers should look at ways to change the disclosure rules to address all parties with stakes at the commission. Any potential rules "should apply prospectively to all, not in a discriminatory manner applied to a single business based on rumors of lawful spending in an election that already occurred," she said. Rep. Petersen wants to scale back Industrial Commission

Rep. Warren Petersen wants to downsize the Industrial Commission of Arizona, saying it has gotten too big in the decades since it expanded past its original mission of overseeing the state's workers' compensation system.

The commission was created in 1925 to deal with workers' compensation, but since 1969 has taken on a number of additional duties, including enforcing federal workplace safety laws, minimum wage increases and youth labor laws, among other things. Petersen, R-Gilbert, wants the commission to get back to basics and is planning legislation to make that happen.

"I think that it's become big and clunky, and I'd like to see them become a semblance of performing the constitutional mandate that they're called out to do ... and nothing more than that," Petersen said. "From what I've seen, all they've done is expand since their inception. And I'd like to see some reforms and some contraction."

Petersen raised those issues during an Aug.

Petersen

25 sunset review hearing for the commission, saying he's concerned with the way it has grown beyond its original scope, which was to enforce workers' compensation system that was added to the Arizona Constitution in 1925. Others appeared to share his concern, as the joint committee voted against recommending the reauthorization of the Industrial Commission.

"I think a lot of our commissions, although well-intended, over time become very burdensome for small business. And I think we need to take a good, hard look at the situation with that," Sen. David Farnsworth, R-Mesa, said during the committee hearing.

If the Legislature strips away the commission's non-workers' compensation duties, the question that arises is what to do with its other duties. In some cases, at least those in which the commission is enforcing federal laws, Petersen's answer is to let the federal government deal with it.

One of the commission's primary duties is to oversee workplace safety laws and regulations through the Arizona Division of Occupational Safety and Health. Under federal law, the state cannot implement workplace safety regulations that are less stringent than federal law, meaning they must be as strict or stricter.

Considering that hindrance, Petersen said the federal government should enforce its own laws and wants to divest the commission of that responsibility. If Arizona has no control over the laws themselves, Petersen said it makes no real difference who enforces them. He noted that, unlike the Arizona Department of Environmental Quality, which also is largely charged with enforcing federal laws, the Industrial Commission doesn't issue permits, which he said makes it largely irrelevant if the laws are enforced by state or federal officials.

"All they can do is make it as strict or stricter. So how can it get better for a business owner at the state level if it has to be as strict or stricter?" Petersen said.

However, recent legislative battles show that some in the business community strongly disagree. In 2012, the Legislature lowered some safety requirements for homebuilders to be less stringent than their federal counterparts, which led the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration to threaten decertification of Arizona's workplace safety program.

Some business groups mobilized to reverse the change to prevent OSHA from taking over workplace safety enforcement in Arizona. Two years later, lawmakers approved a law that would automatically rescind the 2012 law if OSHA rejected Arizona's safety standards, which happened in February.

Mike Gardner, a lobbyist for the Arizona Builders Alliance, which helped lead the charge against the 2012 law, said it makes a huge difference whether workplace safety laws are enforced by state or federal regulators.

"We're very concerned, like we were two years ago," Gardner said of Petersen's proposal. "We would much rather deal with a regulator that's an Arizona state employee, that's Arizona-based, that knows Arizona companies, that we can develop long-term relationships with, rather than some guy that just parachutes in from San Francisco."

Gardner said he supports the idea of having a conversation about the extent of the Industrial Commission's duties and understands if Petersen and others have concerns about its "scope creep." He said he's open to shifting workplace safety regulation to another state entity, or reducing other rules and regulations at the commission. But he said he doesn't want workplace safety enforcement to be solely the domain of the federal government.

The Arizona Chamber of Commerce and Industry took a similar stance.

"ADOSH isn't perfect, but if we have concerns about the agency's performance or believe specific reforms are needed, we can work directly with the agency and the Legislature to affect change. This is similar to our tack on environmental issues. We'd rather deal with DEQ than the Obama administration's EPA," chamber spokesman Garrick Taylor said. ☐

State Archive featured ghost town exhibit

KAREN LOSCHIAVO

Arizona was once home to many thriving mining communities, but the only proof of many of these towns' existence lie in the State Archives.

The State Archives marked the first day of October with a display of some of its hundreds of documents it has related to Arizona ghost towns. The Archive exhibited three tables of photos, maps, letters and other records from Arizona's ghost towns, just for the day.

"We have hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of records that deal with people that lived in those ghost towns," said state archivist Melanie Sturgeon.

There is very little trace left of the towns today, except remnants of buildings at some sites, Sturgeon said. She said the records give an insight into what the communities and their people were like, beyond what old buildings can show.

"We just wanted to give them a different view of a ghost town, not just the buildings which is usually what people go to see, but to remember that there were people that lived in those communities and they did interesting things," she said.

The documents were only on display for the day to protect from fading and damage. Throughout the rest of this month, a smaller exhibit of the ghost town records is on display in the Archive reading room at 1901 W. Madison St. ☐ cating for his bill in the 2015 session he just wants to give attorneys an option to joining the Bar, which has roughly 17,500 attorneys as members and 5,000 judges.

State bar

Arizona is one of 32 states that requires attorneys to join a Bar association.

The committee is going to look at the structure of the Bar, review its history and the role of a mandatory membership. The committee will also look at the practice of law in Arizona, its regulation and the practices of other states, and the free speech and association rights of attorneys in a mandatory Bar.

State Bar CEO John Phelps will be giving a presentation to the committee at its Oct. 19 meeting. Phelps said the organization is a nationally recognized leader among state bars, both voluntary and mandatory, for its regulatory and continuing education systems, financial and management operations, and its magazine and website.

"This misguided effort to 'reform' the Bar by tearing it apart will only diminish the Bar's service to the community and the profession of law in Arizona," Phelps said.

A Supreme Court Task Force that reviewed the role and governance of the State Bar recommended on Sept. 1 to keep the mandatory membership.

The group's written recommendations stated that a mandatory Bar is "integrated with, and an integral part of" the Supreme Court.

The task force said a mandatory Bar benefits the court, attorneys and the public.

"The court has adopted ethical rules for the protection of the public, and the Bar's regulatory function assists the court in enforcing those rules. But what is equally important is that the Bar works proactively to assure that its attorney members comply with the rules," the report stated.

Alex Lane, an attorney who practices criminal defense, created a website to inform his colleagues about the proposed changes and spur them to participate in the process.

He said he sees the issue as a separation of powers and the regulation of attorneys falls within the Supreme Court's authority, not the Legislature's.

"My position is if the State Bar is going to be changed, that would have to happen through either a Board of Governors election or a petition through the Arizona Supreme Court," he said. ☐

“But what is equally important is that the Bar works proactively to assure that its attorney members comply with the rules.”

Toxic waste

U.S. Supreme Court ruling could hamper cleanups around Arizona

HOWARD FISCHER
CAPITOL MEDIA SERVICES

A ruling Oct. 5 from the U.S. Supreme Court could make it harder for state environmental officials to reach settlements with some polluters to clean up hazardous waste sites.

Without comment the justices upheld a decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that a trial judge did not properly examine deals the Department of Environmental Quality reached with 22 polluters. The divided appellate court rejected arguments the judge could simply defer to DEQ's opinion of what was fair.

The ruling most immediately affects efforts by the state to get polluters to pay the estimated $75 million cost to clean up the Broadway-Pantano landfill on Tucson's east side. The Superfund site became a place where numerous companies dumped toxic wastes in the years after World War II and for decades beyond.

But the ruling also says courts must take a closer look at similar deals DEQ reaches with polluters at other sites to ensure they are paying their fair share. That means the companies that want to settle without fighting could find a judge concluding that their offers of funding are insufficient. And that, in turn, could mean fewer deals and more time in court before cleanup efforts can be properly funded.

At issue are efforts to deal with various industrial solvents left at the Tucson site. It originally was a wildcat dump that later developed into two nearby landfills operated by local governments.

Solvents were discovered on site as far back as 1987. It became a state Superfund site in 1998.

DEQ installed pumps, saying that from 2003 through June 2015 nearly 3.2 billion gallons of water was treated, with 55.5 pounds of contaminants removed. The wells are not currently running based on DEQ's assessment that levels are below water quality standards.

The agency has estimated the cost of cleanup at $75 million.

The litigation stems from efforts by DEQ in 2009 to prepare to sue companies which dumped toxic wastes at the site to recover its costs.

Several companies that were potentially the sources of the pollution sought a deal with the state, paying cash up front in exchange for immunity. Such deals are permissible under both state and federal laws. The state sent settlement offers to them, with agreements reached with 22 parties for a total of $512,000, in individual amounts from $10,000 to $150,750.

U.S. District Court Judge Cindy Jorgenson approved the deals. That led to an appeal by others implicated in the pollution, including several large corporations, which contended that these contributions may not cover those polluters' share of the costs.

In a split decision — the one the Supreme Court upheld — the appellate court said Jorgenson should have engaged in a closer examination before letting the smaller polluters off the financial hook.

Attorney Christopher Thomas, who represented the settling parties, said that undermines the whole purpose of the settlements.

"Petitioners avoided defense costs by investing in speedy cleanup instead," he argued to the high court in asking them to void the appellate ruling. He said the irony is that the companies, which wanted to "help pay for the site cleanup rather than to pay attorneys to fight about relative culpability" will now wind up back in court.

The case now goes back to Jorgenson. DEQ spokeswoman Caroline Oppleman pointed out that the appellate court never said the settlements were unfair. She said what may now be needed is for her agency to give the judge additional information to justify each of the deals. Thomas said he believes a case can be made to uphold it once he and the state do a better job of explaining the numbers.

"The test for consent decree approval is whether it is procedurally and substantively fair, reasonable, and consistent with the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, as the Superfund law is more formally known. At that point, he said, the judge can either approve the deal or reject it, a move that would force the state to start over. The bigger issue may be how the ruling could complicate efforts to clean up other Superfund sites around Arizona. Oppleman said that, at the very least, it will require any trial judge reviewing a future settlement "to explain its reasoning in greater detail than previously."

She said the court can give "some deference" to her agency's judgments on making these deals. But it remains the judge's responsibility to ensure the agreements are fair.

Thomas said he sees problems. "The broad impact of this ruling will be to deter settlements," he said, a move that will make the process more expensive for some polluters.

He said both federal and state environmental agencies generally try to get a global deal that includes all parties or at least pays for all the necessary work.

"The government doesn't want to undertake the burden of dealing with small players unless and until it's absolutely necessary," Thomas said. "That can require small players to invest disproportionate attorneys' fees in monitoring the process while the elephants fight."

And Thomas said if DEQ has to make a record of all costs before settling with "the little guys" the state isn't going to spend a lot of time helping them pay up and get out of the litigation. Calls to the attorney for the major polluters who successfully challenged the deals were not returned. ☐

DAVID GOWAN

Gowan lives in Sierra Vista in Arizona's 2nd Congressional District, more than an hour's drive from CD1's southernmost border, but he's not letting the distance stop him from campaigning in the district. Gowan heads into the campaign trail after suffering a rough first year leading state House chamber.

He started his speakership by giving significant raises to some House staff members and hiring several new employees. They included a sergeant at arms — a friend from Cochise County who also serves as his driver and security detail — at double the salary of the previous sergeant at arms.

Personnel costs shot up significantly. But what really galled his fellow Republicans was the large-scale office renovations for Gowan and his leadership team, and his plans to add a multipurpose workout room complete with showers in the House basement to the tune of almost $2 million.

In April, half of his caucus openly rebelled, signing their names to a letter calling for oversight and a halt to Gowan's "excessive spending (that) occurred at a time when the state has been facing a well-known fiscal crisis."

But Gowan said he didn't think his use of taxpayer dollars as speaker would be an issue for his campaign, saying some of the work needed to be done to remove asbestos from the building.

In fact, Gowan insisted that some GOP lawmakers who complained are now happy about the work he did on the House building.

"It's kind of interesting now, they all look at it and they say, 'Wow, that's a nice job,'" he said.

Still, being speaker of the House has its perks, including a constant stream of free media and a large source of campaign contributors from Capitol lobbyists.

That's part of the reason former Republican lawmaker Adam Kwasman is betting on Gowan to win the Republican primary in CD1. Kwasman lost a three-way primary in the district's 2012 GOP primary to former House Speaker Andy Tobin.

"I can tell you firsthand that the power of the speakership helps," he said.

KEN BENNETT

Bennett spent most of his life in Prescott, but joined the race for CD1 from Phoenix's 9th Congressional District, where he moved when he was appointed secretary of state. He enters the GOP primary on the heels of a bruising Republican gubernatorial primary last year in which he placed fourth in the six-way race. His poor showing was largely due to his inability to compete financially as a publicly funded candidate, and his lack of interest in deep-pocketed independent groups that could have supplemented his public funding.

CANDIDATES MIGRATING FOR CHANCE AT AN OPEN CONGRESSIONAL SEAT

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

Of the five Republicans seeking to replace U.S. Rep. Ann Kirkpatrick, three are longtime elected officials who lived outside the district boundaries when Kirkpatrick broke the news in May that the 1st Congressional District would be an open seat in the 2016 election.

The chance at a rare open congressional seat sent two of them scrambling for a rental home inside the district's boundaries, while the third said he will only move if he actually wins the race. Under federal law, members of Congress are not, however, required to live in the district they represent.

And after conducting a districtwide search for a viable Democrat to replace Kirkpatrick that came up blank, party leaders seem to have embraced their own kind of migrant candidate — a former Republican state lawmaker who switched sides and is now running as a Democrat.

— Pinal County Sheriff Paul Babeu moved from his home in the San Tan Valley, which is located just a few miles outside the CD1 boundary in Arizona's 4th Congressional District, into Casa Grande, in the heart of CD1. Babeu is renting-to-own a place there, according to his campaign spokesman Barrett Marson, who said Babeu plans to put his San Tan Valley home on the market, but has not yet done so. But as sheriff, Babeu represents all of Pinal County, a significant portion of CD1.

— Former secretary of state and 2014 GOP gubernatorial primary candidate Ken Bennett moved from Prescott to Phoenix when he was appointed to the statewide office in 2009. He currently resides in the Biltmore area, in Arizona's 9th Congressional district. But Bennett said he has already signed paperwork to rent a home in Maricopa and plans to move there in about a week. Like Babeu, Bennett is renting his place in Maricopa until his home in Prescott sells. But Bennett notes he spent most of his life in Prescott, which was formerly CD1 before the district maps were redrawn in 2011.

— House Speaker David Gowan lives in Sierra Vista, in the heart of Arizona's 2nd Congressional District, more than an hour's drive from CD1's southernmost boundary, and has no immediate plans to move into the district. But Gowan's spokesman Constantin Querard said the speaker will move into CD1 if he wins the general election. Querard said moving into the district just to run doesn't make sense, and that voters don't really care if the candidate lives in the district, as long as they live there once they represent the district. And Querard noted that Gowan's legislative district includes Graham and Greenlee counties, which overlap with CD1.

— Gary Kiehne, a rancher and oil business owner who came in a close second in the 2014 GOP primary for the district, lives in Eagar, in the rural eastern portion of CD1.

— Shawn Redd, a newcomer to state politics who owns a car parts business, lives in Dilkon, on the Navajo Reservation, which makes up a huge portion of CD1.

Democrats, meanwhile, have their own kind of migrant candidate. Tom O'Halleran was a Republican when he served four terms in the Legislature, ending in 2009. Last year, he attempted to return to the state Senate as an independent, though he was thwarted by Republican Sen. Sylvia Allen. Now the Sedona resident has migrated over to the Democratic Party, and the party establishment is lining up behind him as their best chance of holding onto Kirkpatrick's seat.

Bennett said his decision to use public financing last year was a calculation that didn't pay off, and not a reflection of his inability to raise money. He believes he is capable of raising the $1 million to $2 million needed to run a congressional race in the district. He said his campaign will announce its third quarter fundraising totals next week, which he said exceed the campaign's goal.

Bennett said he has already hired top staffers and is well on the way to having his campaign operation in full swing after formally entering the race in early August.

"We're more organized than some people might be aware of," he said.

Bennett has a long history in Arizona politics. He began his career on the Prescott City Council and spent eight years in the state Senate, including four years as Senate president, before being appointed secretary of state in 2009, a position he was elected to in his own right the next year.

PAUL BABEU

Babeu has made a national name for himself as a border hawk sheriff from a county that sees its fair share of problems from illegal immigration, and the guns and drugs that go along with being near the border. Although he represents Pinal County, which makes up a significant portion of CD1, he actually lived in San Tan Valley in Arizona's 4th Congressional District until less than a month ago.

The biggest issue hanging over his candidacy is the one that undid his 2012 bid for the neighboring CD4 — the selfies he took in his underwear and uploaded to a gay hookup website, and the sexually explicit photos he sent to his then-boyfriend.

The photos came out as part of a Phoenix New Times investigation into allegations made by Babeu's Mexican immigrant boyfriend that the sheriff threatened to have him deported if he publicly revealed Babeu's sexuality. Babeu was later cleared of allegations of abuse of authority and threatening his ex-boyfriend.

While Babeu said he is ready to put the issue behind him, his primary election opponents, Democrats and voters are unlikely to forget those photos. He said he didn't want to come out publicly as a gay man out of fear of what people, including Republican voters, would think.

"The one regret I have from all of that, to be honest with you, was the fact that I didn't come out publicly, even though I was open with my family and friends," he said.

But many political observers say the issue isn't that he is gay, or even that he hid it, but his poor judgment in posting selfies in his underwear on the Internet and sending pictures of his genitals to a man he believed was a stranger but turned out to be his boyfriend using a fake profile.

Babeu noted that the voters in his county, after finding out about the scandal, still re-elected him sheriff in 2012. He won the office with more votes than any other politician in the county, except for Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney.

"I'm a policymaker. I don't want to get involved in the power struggles between political parties. I want to be involved in the decision-making process to bring people together."

— Tom O'Halleran

And winning in Pinal County is key to winning CD1: More than a quarter of all votes cast in the GOP primary come from that segment of the huge district.

GARY KIEHNE

Rancher and oil business owner Gary Kiehne actually lives in the district, and has deep roots in the eastern Arizona town of Eagar, where he launched his first campaign for the district in 2013.

Kiehne lost the 2014 CD1 Republican primary by less than 0.01 percentage point. After the GOP nominee lost the November election to Kirkpatrick, Kiehne got right back in the saddle and hit the campaign trail again. He's been running for the seat almost continuously for more than two years.

Kiehne's first run was plagued by verbal gaffes, some of which landed him in the national spotlight.

Many people in the district first heard of Kiehne when he claimed "99 percent" of mass shootings are by the hands of Democrats. He later walked back and apologized for the statement.

The Arizona Police Association called on Kiehne to drop out of the race after he compared police officers carrying out a wildfire evacuation to the Nazi SS force.

But if Kiehne's biggest liability is his mouth, his biggest advantage is his wallet. After spending nearly a half-million of his own money in the 2014 primary, Kiehne has already given his own campaign another $435,000 for the upcoming race, and will likely spend much more for another chance at the seat.

Democratic consultant Marilyn Purvis said Kiehne's biggest liability is his history of bizarre statements, and his very conservative views, which will weigh him down in the moderate district's general election.

"It comes down to, can an ultra-con-

Trans-Pacific Partnership makes Arizona more competitive

CURTIS SPICER
CRONKITE NEWS

Gov. Doug Ducey said he supports the Trans-Pacific Partnership because the trade policy will make Arizona more competitive in the business world.

Officials will now pitch the policy, which trade negotiators agreed upon on Oct. 5, to respective governments involved in the deal.

The proposal eliminates some trade barriers between countries over time and boosts legal protections for copyright and pharmaceutical industries, among other things. It also contains a framework for nations involved to create binding agreements and to settle disputes.

Ducey said Arizona remains one of the largest hubs of trade in North America, although officials and industry leaders need to do more to decrease regulations.

Executive Director Kurt Volker of the McCain Institute asked Ducey about the agreement during an international “state of the state” address on Oct. 5 at the Arizona Biltmore.

“I think it (the trade agreement) means very positive things for Arizona,” Ducey said. “It means positive things for any state that is going to embrace free-market economics and international trade.”

A few pages of the document have been leaked on Wikileaks, but officials have not released most of the trade agreement’s content to the public. Congress won’t vote on the agreement until 2016 at the earliest.

Volker asked Ducey about potential critics of the deal, particularly because low-wage and poorly regulated countries such as Malaysia and Vietnam are involved.

“I think you’re always going to have critics on any big idea,” Ducey said. “We need to answer some of these questions by asking, ‘What’s in our nation’s best economic interest?’”

Arizona’s international competitiveness remains critical to the success of the state, Ducey said. Last year, Arizona set a record high of $21.2 billion in exports.

Ducey said international trade in the U.S. fell 5.2 percent in the last six months, but Arizona’s international trade has increased by 12.5 percent during the same period. In 2014, Arizona imported about $1.5 billion worth of goods and services from Canada, a 92 percent increase from 2009.

“More than 22,000 jobs have been generated by Canadian-owned firms that have located here,” he said. “Next on my priority list would be Canada.”

Volker said he liked that Ducey had numbers readily available during his speech and interview.

“It’s typical of about any business person that they know the numbers,” Volker said. “You talk about some of the increase in exports, and these are all things that are very hard data and very important to know when you try and shape outcomes.”

Volker said he also supports the trade agreement, and it should help Arizona overall.

“I’ve always been a very strong believer in free and open trade,” Volker said. “Trade agreements that remove barriers, remove tariffs, remove regulatory barriers that enable our companies to get in there and compete is always good for the U.S.”

However, Volker said history will judge if Ducey’s approach is the right one.

“If any state in the union were already Switzerland, then you probably wouldn’t need to have a government,” he said. “We’ll see in a few years from now how the governor did. I think the spirit that he showed today is one where he’s willing to roll up his sleeves and try.”

3 commissioners conclude they aren't biased in solar case

After a moment of introspection, three energy regulators have concluded they hold no prejudices and there's no need to recuse themselves from hearing a now-withdrawn proposal by Arizona Public Service to hike the monthly solar fee by 320 percent.

Former Tempe Mayor Hugh Hallman earlier filed motions on behalf of two former regulators and a solar company pressing Commissioners Doug Little, Tom Forese and Bob Stump for their recusal. Hallman alleged that Forese and Little are biased because of alleged utility spending on their elections, and insisted that Stump's social media posts show he is pro-utility.

On Oct. 2, Little wrote in a commission filing that he has considered the full record and the allegations against him.

"I conclude that I have acted fairly, impartially and without bias in all aspects of the proceeding. I am not disqualified from decision-making by any conflict of interest because none exists," he said, arguing that the motion asking for his recusal is based on speculation, not objective evidence.

Hallman filed the motions to reconsider a commission decision to allow Arizona Public Service to press for an increase to its solar fee now instead of waiting for a rate case, which solar advocates say is a better option.

Though the proposal to increase the solar fee was recently withdrawn by APS, the utility still wants a hearing on the costs, but not the value, of solar and non-solar customers. Hallman earlier said the commission will need to formally address the motions if it wants to continue with a hearing in the docket.

The commission on Oct. 6 declined to take up Hallman's motion for a rehearing, effectively denying his appeal. The lawyer and his clients have the option to appeal to Superior Court, the Arizona Court of Appeals or the U.S. District Court.

In September, Hallman asked the regulators to reconsider their decision to hear APS' solar fee hike proposal ahead of a rate case, which the utility is expected to pursue next year. APS had wanted to raise the monthly solar fee to $21 from $5. However, the company recently withdrew that application.

Little

Forese

In asking for a rehearing, Hallman noted allegations that APS funded the dark money campaign that saw more than $3 million flowing in to help elect Forese and Little last year. Many believe the funding came from APS and its parent company, Pinnacle West, although the utility has neither categorically confirmed nor denied the spending, insisting only that it has the right to engage in the elections of its regulators.

Consequently, Hallman argued, both commissioners should recuse themselves from the net metering issue.

In a separate filing on behalf of solar company Sunrun, Hallman said Stump, too, must recuse himself because he is "irretrievably biased" and has pre-judged rooftop solar issues, as evidenced by his posts on social media.

But Stump insisted that's not the case.

"APS does not have exclusive purchase on these ideas, and my musings are not mirrors of APS's positions," he said. "Yet certain intervenors appear unable to distinguish between political satire and the serious stuff of ratemaking. To enter Facebook posts into the docket is surely a first for the commission and, in my view, verges on parody."

In his filing, Hallman had included Stump's Facebook postings as proof that the commissioner is "irretrievably" biased in favor of APS and, as such, his vote to hear the utility's proposal outside of a rate case violated intervenors' due process rights.

But Stump said Hallman should have let alone anything he wrote on Facebook because it's private.

"The entry into the public docket of personal Facebook photos – my page is a private, not official, page – was a gratuitous invasion of my privacy," Stump wrote.

Furthermore, Stump suggested that Hallman and others in the solar industry have no sense of humor or can't tolerate scrutiny. Hallman had complained that Stump's Facebook page and Twitter feed were replete with postings "openly taunting the rooftop solar industry."

Stump quipped back: "Heaven forfend that the political tactics of some in the solar industry should escape scrutiny, and it is such scrutiny which I exercised – as well as light-hearted, often pointed satire. Apparently, the solar industry is populated by Victorian fan-wavers, yearning for a fainting couch, who must be protected from such humor."

He also likened his detractors to "fragile flowers which wither before the sunshine of vigorous debate."

Holding folks who engage in demagoguery accountable is no evidence that he holds ill-will toward the solar industry, he said.

The call for a recusal relies on a 2009 U.S. Supreme Court case, Caperton v. A.T. Massey Coal Co., which involved a coal company spending $3 million via an independent expenditure group to help elect a West Virginia judge who would eventually favor it. The Supreme Court decided the judge should have recused himself because there was an "extreme" appearance of a conflict of interest.

But Little said the facts in Caperton are too different to compare to what's going on at the commission.

"Comparing Caperton to our current situation is a little like comparing a horse and a table. They both have four legs, but the similarity pretty much ends there," Little wrote.

Hallman argued that even if Forese and Little believe they can demonstrate holding no prejudices, case law still requires their recusal.

"It does not matter whether that intentionally-created conclusion has been cemented in Arizonans' minds by APS correctly or in the hope, falsely, of generating influence on Commissioners," Hallman said. "The result is the same: The creation of the appearance of impropriety if Commissioners Forese and Little continue to sit in judgment of the issues brought forth in this docket." ■

TIMELINE

NOVEMBER 2013: The Corporation Commission approves a monthly solar fee, on average $5, for Arizona Public Service customers. The utility originally asked for a much larger fee, but the commission approved $5.

APRIL 2015: Arizona Public Service asks the Corporation Commission to increase its solar fee to $21 to address an alleged cost shift from solar customers to non-solar ones.

AUG. 18: The Corporation Commission votes 3-2 to allow APS to move forward with a hearing on its solar fee now instead of requiring a full rate case.

SEPT. 17: Attorney Hugh Hallman files two motions to reconsider the hearing issue and calls for the recusal of three commissioners, Tom Forese, Doug Little and Bob Stump.

SEPT. 25: APS halts its request to increase the solar fee to $21, instead asking the commission to conduct a hearing on what it costs the utility to serve both solar and non-solar customers.

OCT. 2: Commissioners Doug Little and Tom Forese conclude they are not biased and do not need to recuse themselves.

OCT. 5: Commissioner Bob Stump concludes he is not biased and does not need to recuse himself.

OCT. 6: The commission declines to take up Hallman's motion for a rehearing.

Little wrote resolution for GOP opposing net metering policies

RACHEL LEINGANG

Earlier this month, Arizona Corporation Commissioner Doug Little assured the public that he holds no biases as he sits as a judge on Arizona Public Service's now-withdrawn proposal to hike the monthly solar fee.

"I came to this case with an open mind, and based my decision exclusively on the record. I did not and will not prejudice any issue," he said.

But in October 2013, his mind wasn't so open – at least not on the larger issue of net metering. Back then, Little wrote a resolution opposing the Arizona Corporation Commission's net metering policies, as the commission considered its first solar fee for APS.

Little and the Corporation Commission will eventually decide on multiple upcoming proposals involving net metering.

Corporation commissioners sit in a quasi-judicial capacity, meaning they decide rate issues as judges and are expected to remain objective while weighing all sides of a case.

The resolution, which can be found online on the Maricopa County Republican Briefs website, calls on the commission to abandon its net metering policy and "adopt a new rate structure for residential rooftop solar customers that would fairly apportion electrical grid maintenance costs to all customers and end the current unfair cost shift to non-solar utility customers."

Little wrote the resolution for the consideration of the Maricopa County Republican Committee's executive guidance council. The majority of the 30-member council approved the resolution, Little's office confirmed.

The resolution is dated Oct. 3, 2013. Little officially entered the Corporation Commission race on Nov. 15, 2013, the day after the commission voted to approve a solar fee of about $5 monthly for APS customers.

The resolution lays out how non-solar customers subsidize solar customers and don't pay for their fair share of maintenance costs for the electrical grid, common

HOUSE

10 WEEKS' STOPGAP FUNDING

Voting yes: Kirkpatrick, McSally,

Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema

Voting no: Gosar, Salmon,

Schweikert, Franks

Not voting: None

Voting 277 for and 151 against, the House on Sept. 30 joined the Senate (below) in passing a stopgap appropriations bill (HR 719) that would fund the government through Dec. 11 at an annualized level of nearly $1.02 trillion in discretionary spending. The bill, which would cover the first 10 weeks of fiscal 2016, was supported by all 186 Democrats who voted and opposed by 151 of the 242 Republicans who voted.

Harold Rogers, R-Ky, called the bill "a responsible measure that prevents a harmful government shutdown."

No member spoke against the bill during floor debate on it.

A yes vote was to send the bill to President Obama.

ABORTION, MEDICAID PAYMENTS

Voting yes: McSally, Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert, Franks

Voting no: Kirkpatrick, Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema

Not voting: None

Voting 236 for and 193 against, the House on Sept. 29 passed a GOP-drafted bill (HR 3495) allowing states to deny Medicaid funding to Planned Parenthood and other medical providers, including doctors, in response to their abortion services. This would repeal a requirement in law that Medicaid patients be allowed to receive care from any qualified provider of their choice. Critics said the bill's denying Medicaid reimbursements to selected doctors and clinics would take away this right of free choice. Under Roe v. Wade, abortion is legal with certain exceptions, and under the Hyde Amendment, federal funds cannot be used to pay for it. This bill is a reaction to the recent release of secretly recorded videos in which Planned Parenthood officials discuss the provision of fetal tissue to medical research.

Joseph Pitts, R-Pa., said: "States should be able to work with providers who... respect life and exclude organizations whose business model is built around the destruction of life."

Diana DeGette, D-Colo., called the bill "an attempt to eliminate health care services for women across the board, using the Planned Parenthood witch hunt as an excuse."

A yes vote was to send the bill to the Senate, where it is expected to stall.

ACCESS TO MEDICAL SERVICES

Voting yes: Kirkpatrick, Grijalva,

Gallego, Sinema

Voting no: McSally, Gosar, Salmon,

Schweikert, Franks

Not voting: None

Voting 184 for and 242 against, the House on Sept. 29 defeated a Democratic bid to blunt the impact of HR 3495 (above) by stipulating that none of its provisions could be used to prohibit women's access to medical services.

Kyrsten Sinema, D-Ariz., said: "This motion is straightforward and common-sense....(It) protects the health of American women."

Joseph Pitts, R-Pa., said the underlying bill "will not harm women's access to health care" while giving states "more tools to design a Medicaid program that fully serves low-income women and men."

A yes vote was to adopt the motion, which, had it prevailed, would have immediately amended the bill.

FY2016 MILITARY BUDGET

Voting yes: Kirkpatrick, McSally,

Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert,

Franks, Sinema

Voting no: Grijalva, Gallego

Not voting: None

Voting 270 for and 156 against, the House on Oct. 1 approved the conference report on a bill (HR 1735) authorizing a $604.2 billion military budget for fiscal 2016, including $50.9 billion in emergency spending for U.S. combat operations abroad. The bill drew a presidential veto threat over its shifting of $38 billion in routine military spending to an emergency war account in order to evade Pentagon spending caps imposed by the sequester. Democrats said they want sequester caps repealed for both domestic and military programs.

The bill authorizes more than $50 billion for active-duty and retiree health care; $3.8 billion for Afghan security forces; $715 million to help the Iraqi military fight Islamic State forces; $600 million to boost Syrian opposition forces; $350 million in military aid to Ukraine (including $50 million for arms) and $120 million for securing the U.S. southern border. The bill sets a 1.3 percent pay raise for uniformed personnel and begins a 401(k)-style retirement plan for active and retired service members as an alternative to the military's defined-benefit retirement plan. In addition, the bill requires military personnel to obey the Army Field Manual's ban on torture of prisoners.

Bradley Byrne, R-Ala., said that in light of current national-security threats, it is "simply beyond belief" that President Obama would threaten to veto the bill.

Jared Polis, D-Colo., said: "Just yesterday, 151 (House) Republicans voted to shut down the Pentagon just because they couldn't get their way" on an unrelated bill to defund Planned Parenthood.

A yes vote was to approve the conference report, which awaits Senate action,

KEEPING IRAN SANCTIONS

Voting yes: McSally, Gosar, Salmon,

Schweikert, Franks, Sinema

Voting no: Kirkpatrick, Grijalva,

Gallego

Not voting: None

Voting 251 for and 173 against, the House on Oct. 1 passed a bill (HR 3457) to keep U.S. economic sanctions on Iran until it has paid outstanding court judgments arising from its involvement in acts of terrorism. This was another bid by Republicans to kill a soon-to-be-implemented six-nation deal in which Iran has agreed to dismantle its nuclear-arms program in return for a lifting of U.S. and international sanctions on its financial and energy sectors.

Bradley Byrne, R-Ala., said the bill presents a choice: "You either stand with the ayatollah or you stand with U.S. citizens — it's one way or the other."

James McGovern, D-Mass., called the bill "a political charade" that has no chance of becoming law.

A yes vote was to send the bill to the Senate, where it will be dead on arrival.

Sen. Lesko decides not to run for Corporation Commission

LUIGE DEL PUERTO

luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Sen. Debbie Lesko, R-Peoria, has decided not to seek a seat on the Arizona Corporation Commission.

Instead, Lesko said she will run for re-election to the Senate.

Lesko's name has often been mentioned as a potential candidate for the regulatory agency, where three seats are up for grabs in 2016.

This year, she successfully shepherded legislation that imposed new disclosure requirements on rooftop solar sales and leases. By doing so, she pushed to the forefront the issue of supposedly questionable marketing practices by some in the solar industry.

The senator said she's staying in the Senate for two major reasons.

"I love my job in the Senate and I like doing it," she said. "Of second importance is that (Rep.) Rick Gray decided to run and he is my seatmate in the Legislature, and I didn't want to step on his toes."

Additionally, she doesn't want to handicap her legislative district by having two of its incumbents leave their posts at the same time, she said, adding, "I can always run for the Corporation Commission in the future."

When pressed, Lesko acknowledged that the troubles plaguing the commission were part of the reason why she has decided to stay in the Legislature.

"I think anyone needs to look at the current political climate with the Corporation Commission before they decide to run for it," she said. "Historically, the Corporation Commission — most people didn't even know what they do, and now they're in the limelight."

In an earlier op-ed to the Arizona Capitol Times, Lesko attributed consumer protection issues she highlighted this year to the growing pains of the rooftop solar industry.

"Scores of constituents, many of whom are seniors who live on fixed incomes, relate their concerns to me: aggressive sales pitches that promise huge savings on their utility bills, leasing agreements that are hard to understand and difficulties in trying to sell their homes with long-term leases attached," she wrote.

Just as important is the effect of rooftop solar on non-solar consumers, she said.

Earlier, an administrative law judge had questioned a utility's focus on rooftop solar, arguing that energy efficiency programs have essentially cost more than residential solar.

But Lesko countered that it's an issue of fairness.

"Solar is growing rapidly in communities in my district and thus the issue of fairness is of growing importance. I must look out for the interests of all my constituents," she said.

Commissioners Bob Burns and Bitter Smith are expected to seek re-election, while Commissioner Bob Stump is termed out next year. ☞

CD1 power vacuum

"It comes down to, can an ultra-conservative win a swing district?" she said.

SHAWN REDD

Political newcomer Shawn Redd joined the GOP primary race from his home on the Navajo Reservation town of Dilkon. Redd, who owns several small businesses, including a car parts store and laundromat, has never held elected office, but boasts on his campaign website that he has worked for several candidates in Navajo Nation races.

But given that Redd's potential built-in base of Navajo voters overwhelmingly vote Democratic, making a bid as a Republican could be a tough sell. Redd did not return calls for comment.

TOM O'HALLERAN

In their quest to find a viable Democratic candidate to replace Kirkpatrick, party leaders have taken an unusual approach and embraced a former adversary.

Former Republican state lawmaker Tom O'Halleran, who lives in Sedona in the northern portion of CD1, served six years in the House and two years in the Senate, where he often clashed with his Republican colleagues on major issues.

Last year, he forsook his party and re-registered as an independent, launching a failed bid for the state Senate.

Now O'Halleran is a Democrat, and a host of his new partymates are supporting him as their best chance of keeping CD1 in Democratic hands.

In a way, O'Halleran's decision to become a Democrat is the next logical progression for a politician who never quite fit into the Republican Party.

“It comes down to, can an ultra-conservative win a swing district?”

— Democratic consultant Marilyn Purvis on Kiehne's biggest liability

But his candidacy leaves something to be desired for progressive Democrats and even some conservative Democrats.

Democratic Sen. Barbara McGuire, who served with O'Halleran in the Legislature, is considering challenging O'Halleran for the Democratic nomination.

She said many of the Democratic clubs in CD1 have expressed "extreme desire" for her to run, and she took a few shots at O'Halleran for being a "recruited" newcomer to the party.

McGuire is a conservative Democrat from Kearny who often clashes with her party on major issues, including firearms regulations. But O'Halleran is a moderate Republican at heart, and has the record to prove it, she said.

"He's been a Republican a lot longer than he has been a Democrat, and he's voted Republican a lot more than he has voted Democrat," she said.

Part of the reason why his transition to the Democratic Party has been easy, O'Halleran suggested, is that he has never particularly cared for party struggles.

"I'm a policymaker. I don't want to get involved in the power struggles between political parties. I want to be involved in the decision-making process to bring people together," he said. ☞

SENATE

FUNDS TO KEEP GOVERNMENT OPEN

Voting yes: McCain, Flake

Voting no: None

Not voting: None

Voting 78 for and 20 against, the Senate on Sept. 30 passed an appropriations bill (HR 719) to fund the federal government over the next 10 weeks and thus avert a partial shutdown of agencies on Oct. 1, the first day of fiscal 2016. The bill, which funds discretionary programs at an annualized level of nearly $1.02 trillion, was necessary because Congress failed to enact any of the 12 regular appropriations bills for the new fiscal year. The bill was supported by all 46 members of the Democratic caucus and 32 Republicans and opposed by 20 Republicans. The two senators not voting were Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., and Marco Rubio, R-Fla.

Richard Durbin, D-Ill., said "this brinkmanship goes far beyond flowery speeches on the floor and press attention. The last shutdown hurt the gross domestic product.... We saw $2 billion in lost productivity from furloughed employees."

Ted Cruz, R-Texas, said Republican leaders "said they will never, ever shut down the government, and suddenly President Obama understands the easy key to winning every battle: He simply has to utter the word 'shutdown' and Republican leadership runs to the hills."

A yes vote was to send the bill to the House.

refrains used by utilities to justify fees on solar customers or changes to net metering.

"Those utility customers that are unable or unwilling to pay the substantial costs associated with the installation of residential rooftop solar currently pay not only for the energy they use, but also pay the total costs of maintaining the electrical grid under the current 'cost of service' model," the resolution says.

Little was not available for an interview, but the Arizona Capitol Times sent questions about the resolution to Little's office. Little's office said the resolution did not include the depth typically seen in a policy paper.

"The term 'policy paper' implies an in-depth analysis of facts and discussion of possible policy alternatives. The resolution in question is a very high-level document that does not address factual issues," Little's office quoted him as saying.

Though Little wrote strongly against net metering about two years ago, his decisions on net metering proposals as a commissioner will be based solely on the official record that comes as part of the commission's hearings, he said.

Little said he is "now in a position to make a more informed decision based on a deeper understanding of the issues."

In previous commission elections, candidates and potential candidates have been circumspect about what they said related to commission policies and debates, attorney Hugh Hallman told the Capitol Times.

"Generally, what we're going to have to decide is whether or not the commission positions continue to retain the notion of being quasi-judicial offices," Hallman said.

As to whether Little's previous position on net metering affects his ability to do his job as a regulator, Hallman said he would "leave that to others to discuss." ☞

Alaska

Median income drops below 1989 levels

ANCHORAGE — Alaska residents are making less money than they have in years, with the state's median income dropping below that of 1989.

A new study by the Alaska Department of Labor and Workforce Development has found that, adjusting for inflation, the state's median yearly income has dropped from the equivalent of $49,000 in 1989 to $45,000 today, according to KTUU-TV.

The report shows that 60 percent of those earning low wages are women. Women were much more likely to earn lower wages than men in 1989 and again in 2014.

State economist Neal Fried said job growth in the 1990s was primarily in the service sector, which typically pays lower wages. He said that growth paired with losses in high-wage industries like timber and oil have dragged the median down.

Colorado

Marijuana pesticide flap triggers lawsuit

DENVER — Two marijuana users in Colorado filed a lawsuit Oct. 5 against a pot business they said used an unhealthy pesticide to grow their weed — a case that lawyers say is the first product liability claim in the nation involving the legal marijuana industry.

The case underscores disagreement over what chemicals should be allowed in the cultivation of pot and leaves the plaintiffs facing a dilemma: The U.S. government still regards almost all marijuana as an illicit drug and there are no federal safety guidelines for growing it.

The state of Colorado has approved a list of pesticides that are acceptable to grow pot, but it's far from complete and leaves out several pesticides that are commonly used on both food and tobacco.

The lawsuit filed in state court targets use of a fungicide called Eagle 20 EW by a Denver-based pot company called LivWell, where authorities quarantined thousands of plants earlier this year, saying they had been treated with the pesticide. Eagle 20 EW is commonly used on grapes and hops but can become dangerous when heated and is banned for use on tobacco.

CALIFORNIA

City orders eateries to use paper plates

FORT BRAGG — A Northern California city has ordered restaurants to cut back on dishwashing by using disposable plates and cups as a way to save water amid the state's fourth year of drought.

The San Francisco Chronicle reported that Fort Bragg officials declared a water emergency after a river that provides the coastal town's drinking water got so low that ocean water seeped into city pipes.

The City Council ordered residents and businesses to cut water use by 30 percent compared to last year's consumption rate. Residents are barred from washing cars, irrigating lawns and maintaining landscaping with water. Restaurants and hotels are required to use disposable flatware and serve water only upon request.

Idaho

Researchers say charging stations key to electric cars

IDAHO FALLS — An Idaho National Laboratory study has found that widespread adoption of electric vehicles could reduce the country's gas consumption, but that the availability of charging stations will determine if more people buy.

The Post Register reports that the report looks at research from 2011 through 2013 and is the most comprehensive study of electric vehicles and charging usage ever conducted. The research was conducted for the U.S. Department of Energy, which is pushing for more widespread adoption of plug-in electric cars.

The report finds that charging stations should be in places where vehicles spend long periods parked, including homes and workplaces, as opposed to where gas stations are. It also found that home charging stations could be made more efficient and cost effective.

Kansas

State signs efficiency study, rejects lowest bid

TOPEKA — Kansas lawmakers have agreed to pay a firm about $2.6 million to perform a government efficiency study although another firm offered to do the job for less than $1 million.

The state signed a contract Oct. 5 with Alvarez & Marsal, which would be paid $2.6 million to perform the study, The Wichita Eagle reported. Another firm, McGladrey, said it would do the job for less than $1 million. Another firm, Deloitte, submitted a bid for $2.5 million, and the Boston Consulting Group submitted a bid for $2.8 million.

Rachel Whitten, spokeswoman for House Speaker Ray Merrick, said in an email Oct. 5 that lawmakers considered expertise before cost when choosing the firm and that "McGladrey's scope of work was not as extensive as A&M."

The Kansas contract includes a diagnostic analysis of the state's budget, an evaluation of the state's budget process and the submission of a set of cost-saving recommendations. The Legislature is exempt from the study.

Montana

Utility challenged over charges for electricity

BILLINGS — NorthWestern Energy makes its case to state regulators this week in a dispute over at least $8.5 million that the utility collected from Montana customers after a 2013 power plant outage forced it to buy electricity on the open market.

The South Dakota-based utility said in filings with the state Public Service Commission that the charges offset costs for the replacement power it bought. That happened after the Colstrip coal plant was partially idled for more than six months for repairs beginning in July 2013.

The Montana Consumer Counsel and environmental groups want the money returned to customers. They argue that NorthWestern should have taken out insurance against a possible Colstrip outage, or sued plant operator PPL Montana to recover the cost of getting power elsewhere.

Customers who paid for the replacement power continued to be charged for NorthWestern's investments in Colstrip. NorthWestern is a partial owner of the southeastern Montana coal plant and has more than 350,000 customers in Montana.

Nebraska

City bans sky lanterns

BEATRICE — The city of Beatrice is now off-limits to sky lanterns.

The Beatrice Daily Sun reports that the City Council voted Oct. 5 to adopt an ordinance that does not allow them to be sold or used within city limits. Beatrice now joins other cities, including Lincoln, Waverly and Hastings, in banning the popular fireworks stand devices.

The lanterns are small paper air balloons powered by a flame. Fire officials have decried the lanterns as a fire hazard because they can land on rooftops, fields or wooded areas and spark destructive fires.

investigating hit-and-run wrecks for which the statute may apply.

"Absolutely," Clark County District Attorney Steve Wolfson responded when asked if prosecutors could bring felony charges in the separate crashes last week that left a 5-year-old girl injured on and a motorcyclist dead. Arrests haven't been made, and police haven't sought criminal complaints or warrants.

The new law, passed by the state Legislature earlier this year, makes the penalty for felony hit-and-run in Nevada the same as for felony drunk driving: A mandatory two years in prison, with no chance for probation.

The law, sponsored by state Sen. Mark Manendo, aims at discouraging motorists from gambling that they can avoid a drunken driving prosecution by fleeing a crash causing injury or death until they had time to sober up.

New Mexico

Hearing on teacher evaluation system nears end

SANTA FE — A hearing over a push by unions to halt part of New Mexico's teacher evaluation system is set to conclude this week.

A Santa Fe judge is scheduled to hear closing arguments over whether the state should stop its use of test scores in the evaluations.

American Federation of Teachers New Mexico and the Albuquerque Teachers Federation are seeking an injunction to halt the use of test scores while their lawsuit against the evaluation system goes through the court system. The unions say the evaluation system is forcing veteran educators to retire or have their licenses jeopardized. They want the evaluation system tossed.

But Public Education Department spokesman Robert McEntyre says the suit is a "disappointing distraction" from the agency's mission of providing a quality education to children.

North Dakota

Taxable sales drop 16%

BISMARCK — North Dakota's taxable sales and purchases dropped more than 16 percent during April, May and June when compared to the corresponding three months a year ago.

The Tax Department says the state recorded $5.9 billion in taxable sales and purchases during the second quarter, compared to about $7 billion in second quarter 2014.

Commissioner Ryan Rauschenberger says the drop is due to a decline in oil activity that's a result of lower crude prices, and was expected. He says the state has experienced tremendous growth in taxable sales in recent years due to the oil boom, and the second quarter figures are still strong.

Six of the 15 major industry sectors had gains. The mining and oil extraction sector was down more than 31.4 percent.

Workers remove Ten Commandments monument from Capitol

OKLAHOMA — A granite monument of the Ten Commandments that has sparked controversy since its installation on the Oklahoma Capitol grounds was moved early Oct. 6 to a private conservative think tank for storage.

The Oklahoma Supreme Court decided in June that the display violates a state constitutional prohibition on the use of public property to support "any sect, church, denomination or system of religion." A contractor began removing the monument shortly after 10:30 p.m. Oct. 5.

The state was paying the contractor about $4,700 to remove the monument and take it to the Oklahoma Council of Public Affairs' offices a few blocks away, Office of Management and Enterprise Services spokesman John Estus said.

Earlier Oct. 5, the Oklahoma Highway Patrol increased security around the monument and barriers were erected to keep visitors from getting too close. Estus said the monument was removed under the cover of darkness to avoid disturbing workers at the Capitol and to keep protesters from demonstrating while heavy equipment was being used to detach the two-ton monument from its base.

County to reevaluate solar farms after complaints

BEND — Deschutes County commissioners are reviewing permit applications for two solar farms east of Bend after neighbors of the project sites filed appeals.

The Bulletin reports that a county hearings officer approved permits for the solar farms last month after concluding the projects would comply with surrounding uses in the exclusive farm use zone where they are proposed.

Neighbors of both projects filed appeals last week asking the commission to reconsider the permits. They say the 70-acre project will change the landscape of the area, which is otherwise agricultural land.

Man gets 20 years after posing as child

FORT WORTH — An 18-year-old man accused of posing as a 12-year-old to enroll at a Hurst elementary school has been sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Ricardo Lugo was sentenced to prison Oct. 5 for indecency with a child, and received 10 years of probation for possession with intent to promote child pornography. Authorities say Lugo was enrolled in the 6th grade last year at Hurst Hills Elementary School, and his enrollment was supported by false documents presented to the school.

Twenty-nine-year-old Randy Ray Wesson, who Hurst police say posed as Lugo's father, pleaded guilty earlier to federal child pornography charges. Authorities say they discovered thousands of child pornography images in Wesson's home during a raid. He is scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 3.

Utah

New Medicaid plan to get first public hearing

SALT LAKE CITY — A new plan to help more of Utah's poor get health insurance is scheduled to get its first public hearing this week after GOP officials spent the summer hammering it out behind closed doors.

Lawmakers on a health reform committee will invite doctors and others to comment on the plan, which the Legislature is expected to consider during a special session later this year.

Republican Gov. Gary Herbert is one of six GOP officials who came up with the Medicaid plan, which uses a chunk of federal money under President Barack Obama's 2010 health care law to pay for more people to get insurance.

Herbert proposed a plan to cover thousands of the state's poor with private health insurance. Republican lawmakers rejected that earlier this year, saying they worried it would be too expensive for Utah and the costs could spiral out of control, among other concerns.

Since then, Herbert and top Republicans in the House and Senate have been meeting secretly all summer, working on a similar plan that requires doctors, hospitals and others to pay Utah's $55 million cost of the program. The federal government is offering to pay the rest of the cost, about $450 million.

Washington

Groups consider climate change initiative

SEATTLE — A broad coalition of groups says it's launching an initiative effort to tackle climate change in Washington.

The Alliance for Jobs and Clean Energy is announcing plans Oct. 6 to put an initiative before voters in November 2016. The statewide ballot measure would cap greenhouse gas emissions and put a price on carbon pollution, though many other details have not been decided yet.

OneAmerica's Rich Stolz says the idea is to curb pollution while also raising money for jobs, clean energy and minority and low-income communities that are disproportionately harmed by carbon pollution. He says racial and social equity would be central to the measure.

A competing effort, Initiative 732, would tax carbon pollution. Organizers have collected 237,000 signatures of the 330,000 needed to put I-732 before the 2016 Legislature. If lawmakers don't act, it would go on the 2016 ballot.

Wyoming

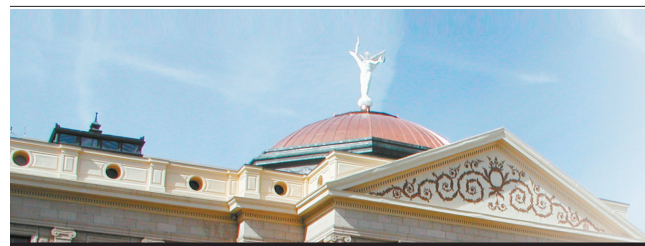

Capitol renovation faces budget problems

CHEYENNE — State leaders are working to revise plans for the project to renovate the State Capitol and adjacent Herschler Building after learning the work will exceed the project's $300 million budget.

The Wyoming Tribune Eagle reports the Capitol Renovation Oversight Group was informed Oct. 5 that the Herschler Building portion of the work is $32 million over budget.

In response, the oversight group has recommended getting rid of plans to build a four-story addition onto the state office building. The group is now looking to instead extend the wings of the V-shaped building that sits north of the Capitol.

A consultant says the new idea would help bring the renovation project back within its budget. Construction work on the $300 million Capitol restoration project is expected to start next spring.

TIMES PAST

Sedona to Flagstaff Through Oak Creek

The road from Sedona through Oak Creek Canyon to Flagstaff, Arizona's scenic Highway 89A, was just a patchwork of private tracks until the first part of the 20th century.

J.J. Thompson built the stretch from Sedona to what is today Indian Gardens in 1887 and settled there. He took the easy route, building along the creek bed, only to regret it a few years later when a storm washed out the road. His next effort was built above the creek, and was the labor of several years.

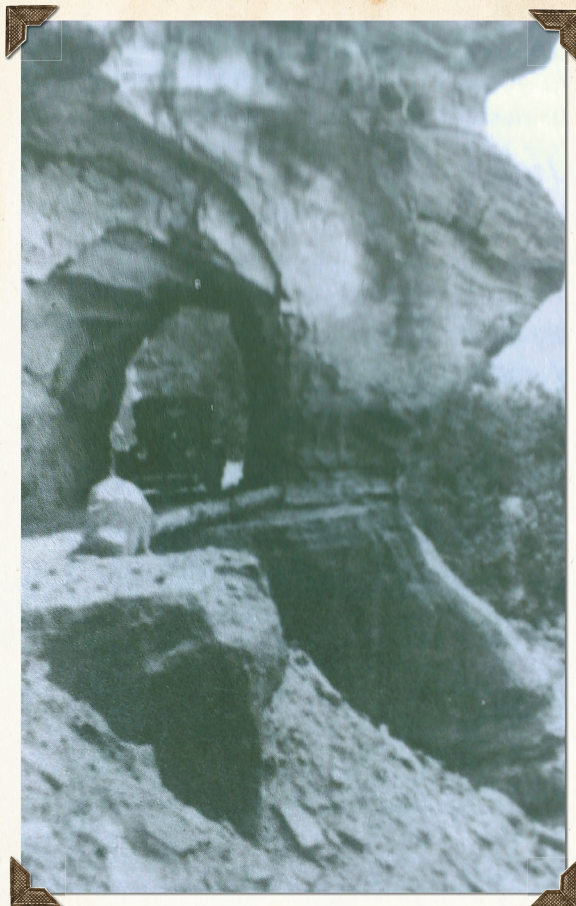

A little over a decade later, a road was built from Flagstaff to the spot where the West Fork flows into Oak Creek. It was built by Dad Thomas who owned property on the West Fork, but was paid for with money donated by a group of Flagstaff fishermen, who liked to fish the area but disliked packing in their supplies by horse.

Thomas used old logging roads south of Flagstaff as much as possible until he reached Fry Canyon. From there he had to clear the way himself. It took five years, from 1901 to 1906, to complete the road, which in many places was little more than a wagon track. Rough as it was, it was the first roadway between Flagstaff and Oak Creek Canyon.

Frank Pendley of Slide Rock Ranch, Jess Howard and Albert Purtyman built the section of road that connected Indian Gardens to the Thomas place. Again, it was a labor of years. Work was completed in 1914, when a small wooden bridge was built at Slide Rock. For the first time, a road was open all the way from Sedona to Flagstaff.

In the twenties, Coconino County took the road into its system, improving the stretch on the canyon floor by widening it to two lanes. The narrow one-lane road up the side of the canyon to the rim and Flagstaff remained a series of steep switchbacks with occasional pullouts. Drivers were expected to honk before starting on the road. If there was no answering honk, they could proceed to a pullout. If by chance two cars met, one had to back up to the last pullout to let the other car pass.

The road was difficult and dangerous. Tim Riordan and his son-in-law, Bob Chambers, had a frightening experience one time in Riordan's Lincoln touring car. The car was too long to make one particular curve and the men had to back up and go forward several times to get around it. When they finished, they got out to take a break. Chambers walked to a spot along the curve where there was a large log, which he and Riordan believed was a safety guard to keep cars from backing up too far. He put his foot on the log and it rolled over the edge and crashed down the hill. Both men were so shaken by the experience they had to sit by the road for a time to recover.

Today, you can see remnants of the old road from present-day Highway 89A near the top of the canyon rim.

Notwithstanding the restrictions imposed by this subparagraph, if the Code is amended to remove the requirement, that any or all of such restrictions be complied with by private foundations, then those of the foregoing restrictions which no longer apply will be deemed deleted and will have no further force or effect.

AUTHENTIC CONNECTIONS

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF AUTHENTIC CONNECTIONS The undersigned incorporators, desiring to form a nonprofit corporation under laws of the State of Arizona, hereby adopt the following Articles of Incorporation.

I. Name and Place of Business The name of the corporation shall be Authentic Connections (referred to herein as the "Corporation"). The initial place of business and address for the Corporation will be 1545 E. Jeanine Drive, Tempe, AZ 85284.

II. Purpose and Activities This Corporation is a nonprofit organization organized and operated exclusively for charitable, educational, literary, and scientific purposes within the meaning of Section 501 (c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended (the "Code"), or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws. Within the meaning of Section 501(c)(3), the Corporation initially intends to provide education and training to ensure mothers are themselves "tended" as they negotiate the myriad of demands in their everyday life roles so not only are they better cared for, but to enhance the lives of their children and those around them. Using a scientifically derived program based in mutually supportive, authentic connections, we seek to maximize women's personal well-being and resilient adaptation in their families, communities, and professional work settings. Except as otherwise provided in these Articles, the Corporation also may transact any and all lawful business for which nonprofit corporations may be organized under the laws of Arizona, as amended from time to time.

III. Limitation on Activities (a) No part of the net earnings of the Corporation shall inure to the benefit of or be distributable to its director, officers, or other private persons, except that the Corporation shall be authorized and empowered to pay reasonable compensation for services rendered and to make payments and distributions in furtherance of the purposes set forth in Article II hereof. No substantial part of the Corporation's activities shall be the carrying on of propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation. The Corporation shall not participate in or intervene in (including the publishing or distribution of statements with respect to) any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office. (b) It is intended that this Corporation shall have the status of a corporation which is exempt from federal income taxation under Section 501 (a) of the Code as an organization described in Section 501(c)(3). These Articles shall be construed accordingly, and all powers and activities of the Corporation shall be limited accordingly. (c) Notwithstanding any other provision of these Articles, the Corporation shall not carry on any activities not permitted to be carried on by a corporation: (I) exempt from income tax under Section 501(c)(3) of the Code or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws; (2) contributions to which are deductible for income tax purposes under Section 170(c)(2) of the Code or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws; (3) bequests, legacies, devises, and transfers to which are deductible for estate tax purposes under Section 2055(a)(2) of the Code or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws; or (4) gifts to which are deductible for gift tax: purposes under Section 2522(a)(2) of the Code or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws. (d) During any period that the Corporation is a private foundation as that term is defined in Section 509 of the Code, the Corporation's powers will be restricted specifically as follows: (i) the Corporation will distribute its income for each tax year at such time and in such manner as not to become subject to the tax on undistributed income imposed by Section 4942 of the Code; (ii) the Corporation will not engage in any act of self-dealing as defined in Section 4942(d) of the Code; (iii) the Corporation will not retain any excess business holdings as defined in Section 4943(c) of the Code; (iv) the Corporation will not make any investments in such manner as to subject it to tax under Section 4944 of the Code; and (v) the Corporation will not make any taxable expenditures as defined in Section 4945(d) of the Code. Notwithstanding the restrictions imposed by this subparagraph, if the Code is amended to remove the requirement, that any or all of such restrictions be complied with by private foundations, then those of the foregoing restrictions which no longer apply will be deemed deleted and will have no further force or effect.

IV. Board of Directors The initial Board of Directors shall consist of four (4) directors. The number of directors and their manner of election will be governed by the Bylaws. The names and addresses of the persons who are to serve as the initial directors until the first election of directors or until their successors are elected and qualify are: Name: Address: Sunya S Luthar, 1545 E Jeannine Dr., Tempe, AZ 85284; Susan Budinger, 4410 Via Esperanza, Santa Barbara, CA 93110; Thomas Beneson, 165 W. V. Limitation of Liability The personal liability of a director of the Corporation, or of a person who serves on a board or council of the Corporation in an advisory capacity to the Corporation for money damages for any action taken or any failure to take action as a director is hereby eliminated to the fullest extent permitted by Arizona law as it now exists or hereafter may be amended. Any repeal or modification of this provision shall be prospective only, and shall not affect adversely any limitation on the personal liability of such person with respect to any act or omission occurring prior to the time of such repeal or modification.

VI. Members The Corporation shall have no members.

VII. Indemnification To the fullest extent permitted by Arizona law as it now exists or hereafter may be amended, the Corporation shall indemnify every director, officer or agent of the Corporation against all expenses and liabilities, including attorneys' fees, reasonably incurred by or imposed upon him in connection with any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, formal or informal, to which he or she is or was a party or is threatened to be made a party by reason of the fact that he or she is or was a director, officer, or agent of the Corporation or is or was serving at the request of the Corporation as a director, officer, employee, member or agent of another corporation or other entity. The foregoing rights of indemnification are limited as required by Arizona law, but shall be in addition to and not exclusive of all of the rights to which such persons may be entitled at law or otherwise. Any repeal or modification of this Article shall be prospective only and shall not adversely affect any indemnification rights of a director, officer or agent of the Corporation existing at the time of such repeal or modification.

VIII. Dissolution Upon dissolution of the Corporation, the Board of Directors, after making provision for the payment of all of the liabilities of the Corporation, shall arrange for the distribution of all of the assets of the Corporation exclusively for the tax-exempt purposes of the Corporation, by distribution to one or more organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable, educational, literary, or scientific purposes as shall at the time qualify as an exempt organization or organizations under Section 501(c)(3) of the Code or corresponding provision of any future federal tax laws, as the Board of Directors shall determine. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Bylaws of the Corporation may provide for more specific direction for distribution upon dissolution by identifying entities to which remaining assets should be distributed following payment of all liabilities. Any such assets not so disposed of shall be disposed of by the Superior Court of the County in which the principal office of the Corporation is then located, exclusively for the tax-exempt purposes of the Corporation or to such organization or organizations, as such Court shall determine, which are organized and operated exclusively for such purposes.

NO. 15-2-09997-9 / SUMMONS BY PUBLICATION

THE STATE OF WASHINGTON to the said JAMES ORSILLO, an individual:

You are hereby summoned to appear within sixty (60) days after the date of the first publication of this summons, to wit, within sixty (60) days after the 25th day of September, 2015, and defend the above-entitled action in the above-entitled court, and answer the Complaint for Interpleader of the Plaintiffs, Evergreen Escrow, Inc., d/b/a Evergreen Note Servicing, and Evergreen Note Servicing, LLC and serve a copy of your answer upon the undersigned attorneys for the Plaintiffs at the office address below stated; and in case of your failure so to do, judgment will be rendered against you according to the demand of the Complaint for Interpleader, which has been filed with the clerk of said court.

The Complaint for Interpleader concerns, among other things, Plaintiffs' deposit into court of money Plaintiffs have collected as a result of their servicing obligations concerning a note receivable originally by and between ERO Enterprises, LLC and Reid Dixon. In their Complaint for Interpleader, Plaintiffs seek a ruling to the effect that Plaintiffs are exonerated from any and all liability with respect to their payment of money from the above-referenced note receivable into court and from their payment of money pursuant to the rulings of the Deschutes County Circuit Court of Oregon, which presided over the dissolution proceeding between and among Defendants James Orsillo and Yvette Orsillo. Plaintiffs also seek a ruling from the Court that adjudicates and resolves the Defendants' competing claims to the money at issue, along with an award of Plaintiffs' costs and attorney's fees incurred in connection with this action.

No commission shall be paid to the broker until a Patent has been issued to the successful bidder by ASLD.

ADDITIONAL CONDITION(S):
The Parcel has formerly been used by Universal Propulsion Company, Inc. ("UPCO") as an aerospace products manufacturing facility. Contamination has been detected in soil, ground water and in soil vapor. Soil samples indicate that perchlorate, arsenic and lead are present in concentrations known as hazardous to human health and the environment and above applicable remedial standards established by the Arizona Department of Environmental Quality ("ADEQ"). Groundwater samples indicate perchlorate and dichloroethylene are present in concentrations above applicable remedial standards established by ADEQ. The contaminants could also potentially be transported, dissolved in surface runoff or attached to sediment traveling with surface water. Arizona Hazardous Waste Management Act Permit U.S. EPA ID No. AZD 980 814 479 ("Permit") has been issued by ADEQ to govern site remediation.

1. Under the Permit, which is subject to modification, the entire 156.87 acres having 22 solid waste management units, 19 monitoring wells, soil remediation activities and 3 areas that have been proposed for capping, are required by ADEQ to be managed, monitored, operated and maintained by UPCO for an indeterminate period necessary to comply with the corrective action requirements of the Permit.
2. ADEQ will require the recording of a Declaration of Environmental Use Restriction with institutional controls ("DEUR") on portions of the Parcel, including, but not limited to prohibiting residential development or any use where natural persons are reasonably expected to be in frequent or repeated contact with the soil. Additional use restrictions will also prohibit the pumping and/or use of groundwater at the Parcel.
3. UPCO, its successors and assigns and the State of Arizona shall have unrestrained access to perform any activity necessary to achieve the remediation or manage containment of the contaminants in the soil, air, surface water and in the water table as required by ADEQ. Annual reports on all activities are to be filed with ADEQ.
4. UPCO may achieve final compliance with the Permit when ADEQ determines no further action is required however; said determination is subject to reversal.
5. Areas of restricted use will also include constructed caps that will require continuing management, maintenance and annual reporting for the duration of their placement. The capped areas will also remain under the direction of, and be subject to, unrestrained access by ADEQ and UPCO.
6. All bidders shall be required to review ADEQ File No. AZD 980 814 479 and the successful bidder shall be required to sign a certification that such review has occurred as a condition prior to registering for the auction.
7. Disclaimer: Successful bidder is aware that, regardless of resources the Arizona State Land Department ("ASLD") and/or the State of Arizona, its employees and its agents (collectively "Seller") have spent planning for the development of the Parcel. Seller does not warrant, represent or guarantee either the quality of its work or the successful development of the Parcel or other parcels of land in the vicinity, nor does Seller warrant, represent or guarantee that government entities with jurisdiction over the Parcel, or utilities which serve the Parcel, will act in a manner that will result in the successful development of the Parcel or other parcels of land in the vicinity. Successful bidder agrees that there are no express or implied representations by any person or entity on which successful bidder relies in the purchase of the Parcel. The Parcel is being sold "As Is" as raw land, and subject to the doctrine of caveat emptor. Seller makes no express or implied warranties as to the condition of the Parcel. Successful bidder purchases the Parcel subject to all taxes and assessments; all covenants, conditions, restrictions, servitudes, reservations, easements, declarations or other matters of record or on file, whether with the State of Arizona, or the county and city in which the Parcel is located; and any and all matters which a survey or physical inspection of the Parcel would reveal, zoning and other restrictions, prohibitions, regulations and requirements imposed by any governmental authorities, statutes, laws, rules and regulations. If the development of the Parcel is contingent upon the cooperation, good faith, skill and/or financial status of third parties, such as government entities, other developers, etc., successful bidder assumes all risk that those third parties will act in a manner satisfactory to successful bidder. Successful bidder warrants and represents that it has performed due diligence on the Parcel and acknowledges that the Parcel is subject to an ongoing environmental investigation and remediation project. Successful bidder understands that the responsible party, UPCO, is performing the work at the Parcel under the oversight of the ADEQ and that successful bidder purchases the Parcel subject to access required by ADEQ and UPCO, and all remedial or corrective actions required by ADEQ.
8. Release and Waiver: Successful bidder recognizes the risks associated with the purchase and development of the Parcel, accepts full responsibility for all risks related to the development of the Parcel, and releases Seller from liability for Claims or Damages (as defined below) related to successful bidder's problems with developing the Parcel. Further, successful bidder waives any and all claims it may have now or in the future against the Seller whether known or unknown at the time of Purchase. Successful bidder assumes full responsibility for investigating the suitability of the Parcel for successful bidder's intended use.

9. Definitions:
a. "Claims or Damages" shall mean any and all claims, demands, liabilities, obligations, losses, damages, fines, penalties, judgments, awards, settlements, expenses, disbursements, taxes, charges, and costs (including without limitation legal, accounting, engineering, construction costs whether past, present or future costs) imposed on the Seller arising out of Use of the Parcel. The term Claims or Damages also includes any and all costs in any manner related to the Environmental Conditions.
b. "Environmental Conditions" shall mean the presence, release or threatened release into the environment of a Hazardous Material, Substance or Waste arising on, at, under or from the Parcel.
c. "Environmental Law" shall mean any federal, state or local law, whether common law, court or administrative order or governmental agency guidelines now or hereinafter in effect relating to the environment, public health, occupational safety, industrial hygiene or any Environmental Conditions.
d. "Hazardous Material, Substance or Waste" shall mean any petroleum, oil, gasoline, other petroleum derivative products, flammable substances, explosives, radioactive material, dioxin, radon gas; any waste, substance, material, liquid, chemical, substance or mixture, element, compound or solution regulated in any form or fashion by any Environmental Law now or hereinafter in effect.
e. "Use" shall mean the use, ownership, management, operation, development or possession of the Parcel or activities conducted nearby or thereon.
10. At the conclusion of the auction, the successful bidder, as a condition to delivery of the Patent for the Parcel, shall sign a document including the Disclaimer set forth in Paragraph 7 above, the Release and Waiver set forth in Paragraph 8 above, and agreeing to defend, release, indemnify and hold ASLD and/or the State of Arizona harmless, from and against any and all Claims or Damages.

11. The Patent for the subject Parcel shall include the following conditions and restrictions:
a. This Patent includes a reservation for the continuing and unhindered right of access and occupancy by the State of Arizona and for the benefit of UPCO and its successors and assigns, without compensation, for the purposes of implementing, managing and reporting upon the activities required under, and for the satisfaction of Arizona Hazardous Waste Management Act Permit U.S. EPA ID No. AZD 980 814 479 ("Permit"), as may be modified by ADEQ, as well as any physical activities including placement of wells, equipment or structures required by or resulting from the Permit, for an indeterminate period of time.
b. There may be Register Eligible Site or Sites located within the subject Parcel, which could include information significant in this state's history, architecture, archaeology or culture and may meet eligibility criteria, which the Arizona State Parks Board has established for listing on the Arizona Register of Historic Places, or which meet eligibility criteria for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. If ground-disturbing activities will or may impact one or more Register Eligible Site or Sites, patentee shall consult with the State Historic Preservation Office and otherwise take such actions as are necessary to avoid, preserve, protect, or mitigate impacts on the Register Eligible Site or Sites. In the event that avoidance, preservation and protection of the Register Eligible Site or Sites cannot be accomplished, patentee shall ensure a Data Recovery Plan is developed in consultation with and acceptable to, the Arizona State Museum and the State Historic Preservation Office, or their successor agencies, and the Data Recovery is implemented and completed prior to the Register Eligible Site or Sites being affected. The artifacts and records recovered from the property shall be curated according to the Arizona State Museum (ASM) Conservation and Curation Standards as established in rules implementing the Arizona Antiquities Act.

A NEW LANDFILL HAS BEEN APPROVED OR HADN'T YOU HEARD?

Right now, government officials have to publish their intentions in the newspaper, including where they intend to build facilities you don't want down the block. But that will change if some politicians get their way. They want to put public notices online instead, buried on some little-seen, rarely visited government website. Don't let the government keep you in the dark.

Ask your lawmakers to vote NO on HB2533 and HB2483.

How A Bill Becomes A Law

A bill is a proposal in the Legislature to change state law. The bills are numbered in the order in which they are filed. In Arizona, bills filed in the Senate are numbered 1001 to 1999 (so far that's been more than enough numbers) and in the House 2001 and up, to avoid confusion. In addition to bills, there are resolutions and memorials, identifiable by the letters preceding their numbers, which are the same as the numbers used for the bills (1001 to 1999 in the Senate; 2001 and up in the House). These are the commonly used abbreviations:

S (or SB) and H (or HB): A Senate or House bill — a proposal to change law, either permanently (statutory law) or temporarily (session law). A bill must pass both the Senate and the House in exactly the same form in order to be sent up for the governor's signature and cannot take effect without the governor's signature except in two cases: 1) If the governor refuses either to sign or veto, the bill is filed into law automatically; and 2) if the governor issues a veto which then is overridden (which requires a super-majority vote, usually two-thirds, in each house).

SR or HR: a Senate Resolution or House Resolution. Such resolutions require passage only by the Senate, for SRs, or the House, for HRs, and ordinarily are used to regret the death of a colleague or express some other sentiment. Do not need governor's approval.

SCR or HCR: Senate or House concurrent resolution. Used principally to refer constitutional amendments, which require voter approval, to the ballot. Do not need governor's approval.

SJR or HJR: Senate or House joint resolution. Used to express views of the entire Legislature; generally considered the highest expression of legislative sentiment. Requires the governor's signature.

SM/HM; SCM/HCM; SJM/HJM: Senate or House memorials, concurrent memorials and joint memorials. Like resolutions, they express legislative sentiment or views. Concurrent memorials frequently are used to send messages, pleas and demands to Congress. Do not need governor's approval.

Where Bills Come From

No one can file a bill, resolution or memorial except a member of the Legislature. A Capitol Times survey covering five years of bill filings showed that about one-third of the bills that are filed each session are dreamed up by the legislators themselves and do not represent or respond to the view of any particular group. Another one-third of the bills comes from state and local government agencies that usually want more money and power.

That leaves about one-third of the bills, and they are filed by legislators at the request of constituents, business associations, social-activist groups, study committees and, in rare cases, particular labor groups or private companies.

An actual example of a particular-company case: an Illinois company wanted to relocate its headquarters to Arizona but already had a subsidiary company here and feared the tax consequences. It hired a lobbyist familiar with Arizona legislative procedure to ask a legislator to sponsor a bill amending the state tax code to say that when the parent of a subsidiary company doing business in Arizona moves to Arizona, the subsidiary company's income is not taxable because the parent's is.

Another example: A legislator's aging grandmother was living in a rest home that decided to outlaw pets. That meant she couldn't keep her pet cat any more. The legislator filed a bill saying rest homes that want to outlaw pets must allow established patients to keep any pets they already had when the new regulation went into effect.

Still another example: A government taxing district wants to undertake a big new project but doesn't have enough statutory taxing authority to pay for it. It will ask a legislator to sponsor the necessary bill.

There are hundreds of situations like these. Every year they result in thirteen hundred bills, give or take a hundred or two, being introduced at the Legislature.

When a legislator gets or is given an idea for a bill, he or she takes it to the Legislative Council, the Legislature's bill-drafting and research arm, where a staff of professional bill-drafters writes it up as a bill proposing to change the law. As soon as the draft is ready, it is returned to the legislator, who may try to secure co-sponsors and then puts the bill in the appropriate hopper — Senate or House. The bill now briefly becomes the property of the Senate secretary or House chief clerk, who assigns it a number and hands it over to the House speaker or Senate president to be assigned to standing committees for hearings.

Committee Action

Standing committees are established by the Senate and House rules and carry over, with occasional changes in names and duties, from Legislature to Legislature.

The number of standing committee varies from Legislature to Legislature — each dealing with a particular area of the law. Bills on taxes and revenue, for example, are assigned in the House to the Ways & Means Committee and in the Senate to the Finance Committee. The members of the committees are appointed by the speaker (in the House) and the president (in the Senate). Once assigned to committees, the bills are controlled by the committee chairmen or chairwomen, who decide when — or whether — to schedule public hearings and testimony on them. There is no requirement for a bill to be heard. If a chairman doesn't schedule it and its sponsor doesn't push too hard, it will die a quiet death.

Bills that clear the committees they're assigned to — ordinarily only one or two committees — are scheduled for debate by the entire House or Senate. The forum for debate is called Committee of the Whole House (or Senate). The COW, as it is universally abbreviated, debates the merits of the bills and any changes to them that have been proposed, either by the committees or by legislators who offer floor amendments during COW debate. With a few exceptions, votes in COW are voice votes, and the COW can become something of a free-for-all, making it, for the spectators in the galleries at least, the most entertaining part of lawmaking.

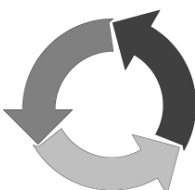

Recorded Votes

A bill approved in COW is reprinted to reflect any changes and is brought back to the floor later for a recorded vote, known as Third Reading, during which every member is counted as Aye, Nay, Absent or Excused. (A member can be excused from voting for only a few reasons, among them a declared potential conflict of interest. An official absence must be approved by the speaker or president).

Passage generally requires a simple majority — 31 votes in the 60-member House and 16 in the 30-member Senate. There are three instances when a super majority is required:

1. If lawmakers wish to have a bill become effective immediately upon the governor's signature, language is added stating the bill is essential to preserve the public peace, health and safety. This language is called the emergency clause. For the bill to retain the emergency clause, it must receive a 2/3 majority in each house.
2. Language placed in statute as a result of a ballot proposition by a vote of the electorate may not be changed by the Legislature except by a 3/4 majority in each house. A bill that proposes such a change must carry a clause stating this — called a Prop 105 clause because this requirement was placed in the state Constitution by Proposition 105 in 1998.
3. A bill that increases state revenues by imposing a new tax or fee must receive a 2/3 majority in each house. Such a bill must carry a clause stating this — called a Prop 108 clause because this requirement was added to the state Constitution by Proposition 108 in 1992.

Play It Again

A bill that survives standing committee hearings, COW debate and a recorded vote in its house of origin now goes to the second house (the Senate if it is a House bill and vice versa) to repeat the entire process on the other side of the legislative courtyard. Once again it is assigned to standing committees and if it survives it is put through COW debate and then a recorded vote.

If after committee hearings and debate the Senate approves a bill in the same form in which it was approved by the House, the bill goes to the governor for his or her signature. The same is true when the House approves a Senate-passed bill without changing it.

Conference Committees

But if, as often happens, the second house changes the bill, it goes back to its house of origin for consideration of the second house's amendment. If the house of origin approves the changes, it votes on the bill a final time and sends it to the governor.

If the house of origin does not approve the second house's version, which happens perhaps 50 to 80 times a session, the bill goes to a conference committee. If the House, for instance, rejects Senate amendments to a House bill, the speaker will name several House members, usually three or five and nearly always including the bill's prime sponsor, as House members of a committee to consider whether still more changes are needed. The Senate will be notified that the House has rejected its amendments, and the Senate president then will name senators to the committee — usually, though not always, the same number as the House is fielding.

There are two kinds of conference committees: Simple (all the jokes have been heard, so don't bother) and Free. A Simple Conference Committee is limited to a specific matter of disagreement and is seldom used. Nearly all conference committees are designated as Free. That means they have no constraints. They can rewrite a bill into something completely different if they wish. That is relatively rare, though; more often they try to accommodate enough of both the House and Senate versions to get enough votes on each side to pass the bill.

The conference committees often meet catch-as-catch-can, since they're usually appointed near the end of session and lawmakers are rushing to get their work done. As they reach agreement they issue written reports, signed by a majority of their members, carrying one of three basic recommendations:

1. Accept the bill as passed by the house of origin and delete the second house's amendments.
2. Accept the bill as passed by the second house.
3. Write a new version of the bill.

These recommendations are taken back to the House and the Senate, which must separately adopt them, usually by voice vote (roll-call if requested). Once a report is adopted, at least one final recorded vote must be taken:

1. If the adopted recommendation is for the House version of a bill the Senate amended, the Senate must vote on the House version of the bill.
2. If the recommendation is for the Senate version of a bill the House amended, the House must vote on the Senate version.
3. And if the recommendation is for a new version that neither house has voted on, both must vote on it a final time.

The One Reliable Rule

Politics being what it is, there is no guarantee in this game except one: both houses must approve the same form of a bill before it can go to the governor.

Apart from that, nearly anything goes. Bills can be defeated in standing committee only to be revived as floor amendments in COW. Conference committees can take separate bills that have a common subject and glue them together to facilitate passage. There are striker amendments, which delete the entire contents of a bill (except its bill number) and substitute new language, sometimes with little, if any, relation to the original bill.

In some years, despite a constitutional requirement that the Legislature must transmit a bill to the governor once it passes all votes, legislative leadership decided that it would sit on the bill for while. There have been instances when a bill that has passed all the hurdles nevertheless was never sent to the governor, and in such cases, once the Legislature adjourns sine die, that bill is dead. However, in 2009, when the Legislature passed a set of budget bills but did not immediately present them to the governor, the executive sued. In Brewer v. Burns/Adams et. al., the state Supreme Court ruled that the Constitution requires transmittal of bills as soon after they are passed as is necessary to accommodate only the various ministerial tasks that must be performed.
