RE-FIGHTING VIETNAM

Arizona veterans group seeks new focus for decades-old battles

JEREMY DUDA

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

The legacy of the Vietnam War is so often remembered in the context of negative perceptions from incidents such as the massive protests that rocked the country, the horrors of the My Lai massacre and the shock of the Tet offensive. A group of Vietnam veterans in Arizona is hoping that a proposed addition to a monument at the Capitol will help correct some of those perceptions.

In doing so, the group is looking to re-fight decades-old battles about the Vietnam War and its ongoing legacy in America.

Joseph Abodeely is part of a group of veterans that wants to add several plaques to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Wesley Bolin Plaza that he said will properly honor the service of the war's veterans and "refute some myths" about the Vietnam War. Abodeely, 72, a retired colonel who served in Vietnam with the Army's 1st Cavalry Division, said the war's veterans are getting old, and they need to clear the air while they're still here.

Joseph Abodeely, Vietnam War veteran

The Vietnam War was about so much more than My Lai and the Tet offensive, Abodeely said. But those are the incidents that are most remembered, while Americans have largely ignored other aspects, including the ways in which the war was inaccurately portrayed in its time and the "national disgrace" of the way in which returning veterans were treated, he said.

That has led to a perception that Vietnam, among all the wars the United States has fought, was the "bad war," Abodeely said.

"All war is brutal. So why pick on the Vietnam veterans? Because it was in vogue then. And now out of a sense of guilt they want to bend over backwards for the new guys. And that's fine. They should be treated with respect. But so should the Vietnam veterans. And saying 'Thank you for your service' just doesn't cut it. The record needs to be set straight. And that's what I'm trying to do," Abodeely said.

The Vietnam memorial at Bolin Plaza already has a series of plaques laying out a chronology of the war and the events that led up to it, beginning with Ho Chi Minh's 1941 formation of the Viet Minh, his resistance force against the Japanese, to the fall of Saigon in 1975. Those texts on those plaques, Abodeely said, is "pablum" that doesn't explain why the war was fought or why it ended the way it did.

That's a word that certainly can't be used to describe the plaques that Abodeely wants placed at the Vietnam monument. The stainless steel plaques, which stand several feet tall, largely serve as not only a tribute to the service of America's Vietnam veterans but as a refutation of left-wing talking points about the war, with facts, observations and timelines laden with editorial comments.

DURANT'S

The first and last word in old-school cool in downtown Phoenix. For more than half a century, the house Jack Durant built has served up class by the barrelful as well as classics like sautéed chicken livers, oysters Rockefeller, lamb chops with mint jelly, and Delmonico steaks, to name a few. Serious fressers can eat their way to a plaque on the wall by polishing off Durant's 48-ounce porterhouse, and you get to do so in leather booths that once hosted Marilyn Monroe, John Wayne, and Robert Mitchum, among other luminaries. Walking through the kitchen to the dining room is an experience in and of itself. And the bar crowd is lively and entertaining. Partake in the legend for yourself by imbibing a few dry martinis or a Dewar's on the rocks whilst relaxing in a banquette once occupied by Barry Goldwater.

THE ARROGANT BUTCHER

Already an iconic downtown Phoenix landmark, the restaurant and bar at The Arrogant Butcher is one of the only places where sports fans and theater-goers can enjoy a burger and a beer next to some of Arizona's top politicians. Behind the drawn curtains of the three private dining rooms, one may find bachelorettes toasting former freedoms, important legislation being discussed, or pre-concert parties warming up for the night's big event. The Arrogant Butcher offers you the best of everything — seafood, steaks, draft beer, wine and cocktails, comfort food and good company. So if you're looking for downtown's only place to be seen, look no further than the corner of Jefferson and 1st. Look no further than The Arrogant Butcher.

“I’m not training to paint like anybody. But the important impact (my parents) had on the arts in Mexico was sort of a legacy to me.”

Jim Covarrubias: Adorning hallways of the Senate

BEN GILES
ben.giles@azcapitoltimes.com

If you’ve ever wandered beyond the first floor of the Arizona Senate, you’ve likely seen the work of Jim Covarrubias, a Phoenix-based artist whose paintings have adorned the hallways of the second and third floors for more than a year. Covarrubias, whose downtown Phoenix studio is full to the brim of paintings, has a wide variety to choose from, and has curated and adjusted the work on display in the Senate over that time. He has plans to feature other artists as well, with a gallery planned for the walls outside Senate President Andy Biggs’ office, to be displayed as early as in May.

How’d you get your start as an artist?

I basically started actively when I graduated with my first degree from ASU in 1978, and I formed a Native American, Latino arts group called MARS (Movimiento Artístico del Río Salado). And that was really my introduction to working art as a living.

How do your Chicano roots impact your work?

There’s been a great influence on my Mexican side, or Latino side or Chicano side. Basically it’s just an inspiration. I’m not training to paint like anybody. But the important impact (my parents) had on the arts in Mexico was sort of a legacy to me. And I’ve always felt that I love art, but I like to help other artists, too, to give them a step up. That’s what I did with MARS. I was just trying to see who was there. I think the arts are a very positive introduction into a culture.

Why is seeking out and working with other artists so important to you?

We are trying to impact, in a couple of different ways, the community. A lot of people are. And we’ve seen the positive influence of art in Arizona. It just has a tremendous social response right now, and a tremendous communication, and I think it’s just going to keep on moving and we want to be a part of that.

How do you find new artists?

That’s pretty easy. There is a strata in that, there is a beginning artist, and there’s a lot of people who’ve been doing arts for a while and don’t really achieve the acclaim, and that’s what’s kind of fun. I get to go out and see, who are people we like, and I think that’s helping them professionally, to kind of come up with how they can market their art, how they can talk about their art. The learning curve is pretty high because most artists aren’t versed in marketing, and there aren’t any classes in marketing, and I think that’s kind of a shame. We might be able to address that later on.

How’d you get your art into the Senate?

It began the idea, really, with the late Benny Miranda. He was a friend of mine, a veteran, an attorney who really helped me out a lot. And we always had the idea of bringing more art to public places. And I painted at the Capitol a few times. In fact, one of the paintings there is one I did in live performance. So it was always a positive response. People really enjoyed it, and we realized, you know what, we want to make a bigger exhibit sometime. When he passed on, his widow, Catherine Miranda, came to me, and she said, “I want to fulfill that dream. I want to bring your art to the Capitol.” So we took in initially, I think 68 paintings. We weren’t sure what the reaction was going to be from everybody. It was very positive from the get go.

How did people react?

I think people appreciate art. They were kind of interested in who I was and what I was doing, but there’s a lot of art there that reveals who we are as Arizonans. It’s our culture. There’s Native American, there’s Western, there’s appreciation of landscape and just pure beauty, like in a still life, and there are some military paintings. So it’s kind of my history, but in a way it’s Arizona history.

Any personal favorites of yours that are on display?

I kind of like a lot of things I’ve done. But the reality is, each painting to me is sort of like a challenge. So some, like a landscape, like the Hualapai – that’s where I grew up there, on the Hualapai Reservation – so that one is special. Other people that I’ve painted, they are special to me, like Zapata, the agrarian revolutionary hero from Mexico. Friends like the Piestewas, I did a painting of Lori Piestewa and her cousin. So some of the things are sentimental, too, I guess. I’m not looking at the art style or anything, but some of this sort of means something to me, are my favorites.

Why’s it important for lawmakers to open the state’s doors to art?

It is good for the state because Arizona is the fourth largest art market in the states, and it’s part of our personality, it’s part of tourism, it’s part of what people view Arizona as. It’s part of the fun. And I think it’s very wise for the political world to share in that and acknowledge that. So we give kudos to all the people over there, from the governor and all the senators and everybody else, for helping us do that and allowing and opening doors so we can bring even more new ideas.

Capitol Spotlight

Legal expert believes Scalia should still have a say

An Arizona attorney who specializes in election law thinks recently deceased Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia should be able to vote on pending cases from the grave — sort of.

Langhofer

Kory Langhofer acknowledged on Feb. 23 there is no way to discern how the justice, who died Feb. 13, might have sided in recently heard cases.

Langhofer pointed out, however, that the justices go into conferences and take votes on how the case should be decided. And he said it might even have gotten to the point where Scalia had actually crafted an opinion. He said there's no legal reason to ignore all that.

But Paul Bender, former dean of the Arizona State University College of Law, said there is one big reason why Scalia's vote — and even his draft opinion — should not matter — by precedent, the high court says decisions are not made until they are actually published.

Bender said there's a good reason for that.

"The case is not decided because they take a vote in conference," he said. "That's a tentative vote. People change their votes up until the last minute."

Langhofer conceded that can happen. But he said that, at some point, it's pretty well known how the justice is going to vote, especially if he or she has written an opinion that is just waiting to be released.

He said he could identify no Supreme Court policy saying once someone dies — or even becomes comatose — that their decision to decide a case a certain way is voided.

Duggan, Polk to lead Criminal Justice Commission

Chandler Police Chief Sean Duggan has been elected chairperson of the Arizona Criminal Justice Commission and Yavapai County Attorney Sheila Polk has been elected vice-chairperson. The selections were made at the commission's January meeting and announced on Feb. 23.

Polk

Duggan was appointed Chandler's chief of police on January 13, 2014, after serving 27 years with the Scottsdale Police Department.

In November 2000, Polk became the first woman to be elected to the position of Yavapai County attorney.

She is serving her fourth term. Polk is chair of the Arizona Prosecuting Attorneys Advisory Council and past president of the Arizona County Attorneys and Sheriffs Association.

Created in 1982, the commission serves as a resource and service organization for Arizona's criminal justice community.

Salmon announces retirement from Congress, backs Biggs as replacement

STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Conservative Arizona Rep. Matt Salmon will not seek re-election to Congress this November, saying on Feb. 25 he wants to spend more time with his family. He endorsed state Senate President Andy Biggs as his replacement.

Salmon, 58, has been a member of the House Freedom Caucus, the rebellious group of conservative lawmakers who frequently defied GOP leaders and helped push former Speaker John Boehner to leave Congress.

Almost immediately, Biggs, 57, announced he would run to replace Salmon and that the congressman would serve as the chairman of his campaign committee.

"As a state legislator, and as Senate president, I have consistently demonstrated my ability to be a conservative leader who can build the necessary coalitions to pass meaningful reforms. I am ready to take my proven 14-year record to Washington and be that strong conservative voice for the East Valley," Biggs, R-Gilbert, said in a written statement announcing his candidacy.

In his own statement, Salmon said he was proud of his votes to cut federal spending.

He first served in the House in the 1990s and unsuccessfully ran for Arizona governor in 2002. He was again elected to the House in 2012.

Salmon's congressional district in the Phoenix suburbs is heavily Republican and is expected to remain in GOP control in the fall elections.

Most observers expect there will be a crowded field of Republicans seeking to succeed Salmon.

Biggs' decision to run for Congress and leave the Legislature two years before he reaches term limits in the Senate leaves a void in leadership. Biggs has served as Senate president since 2013.

Senate Majority Leader Steve Yarbrough, R-Chandler, and Sen. Debbie Lesko, R-Peoria, are both interested in the post. Lesko said Feb. 25 she's "definitely interested," but will first speak with Yarbrough before making a decision about whether to pursue the Senate's top post.

"(Yarbrough's) tried to run in the past over in the House, and he's the majority leader, so I want to see what he's doing," Lesko said.

Biggs' departure has already led to an agreement between the two representatives from Legislative District 12. Gilbert Republican Rep. Warren Peterson announced he'll run for the district's Senate seat, with the support of his colleague, Rep. Eddie Farnsworth.

"My passion has been to protect your liberties and small businesses from government over reach. I promise to continue to do that if I am fortunate enough to be elected to the Senate," Peterson said in a statement on Facebook.

Biggs said in his statement that he's running to ensure Salmon's conservative record continues.

"I never envisioned running for Congress, but Matt's decision to return home leaves a void that must be filled by the kind of strong, conservative voice that the people of Arizona's 5th District have come to expect and that they deserve,"

Biggs said.

Biggs has wielded considerable power in Arizona as Senate president, a post he won after leading an effort to oust then-Senate President Steve Pierce. He battled with former Gov. Jan Brewer over Medicaid expansion in 2013 and was almost overthrown as president by a coalition of Senate Republicans and Democrats who backed the expansion.

He has played an important role in crafting tight state budgets, pushing school choice measures and bills targeting abortion providers.

As president, he controls which legislation gets hearings or votes, repeatedly ensuring that Democrat-sponsored bills and measures like texting-while-driving bans never materialize.

Salmon's endorsement will be a boost for Biggs, but likely won't prevent other Republicans from jumping into a rare open seat in the heavily GOP district, said Chuck Coughlin, a longtime Republican political adviser who ran Brewer's campaigns.

Christine Jones, a Republican who ran for governor in 2014 and whose name is often mentioned as a potential candidate when opportunities arise, said she wasn't interested in running.

Biggs has hired a campaign firm that includes Salmon's former chief of staff, political operative Sean Noble and others with ties to Gov. Doug Ducey. Salmon will chair Biggs' election committee.

House establishes new travel policy in wake of 'Capitol Times' report

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

The Arizona House of Representatives created a new travel policy after an Arizona Capitol Times story revealed that a handful of House Republican leaders and top staffers drove more than 36,000 miles in state vehicles in 2015, sometimes for political or personal purposes.

The new House travel policy, which was distributed to all House lawmakers and staff in mid-January, details a host of requirements for lawmakers seeking reimbursements for their travel on "official state business."

In an email announcing the changes, House Speaker David Gowan said it's his "sincere hope that this memorializes appropriate, reasonable, accurate and efficient travel practices of the House."

The new policy was created on Jan. 19, 11 days after the Capitol Times published a report showing Gowan had used state cars and a state-employed driver to attend political events in Arizona's 1st Congressional District, where Gowan is a candidate.

Under the new policy, lawmakers and their staff can only be reimbursed for "official business" which is defined as "activities relating to the duties or responsibilities of the (lawmaker's) office or staffer's position."

The new policy also encourages lawmakers to use state fleet vehicles if it is more cost-effective than standard mileage

Gowan repaid state $12K for erroneous travel, per diem payments

HANK STEPHENSON

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

Arizona House Speaker David Gowan last month repaid the state more than $12,000 for mileage reimbursements he claimed for trips that he took in state vehicles and for days he claimed to work but did not.

Gowan repaid the travel reimbursement money after the Arizona Capitol Times published a Jan. 8 article detailing the increase of state fleet vehicle use by top Republican lawmakers and their staff. The speaker declined to comment on the issue.

House Republican caucus spokesperson Stephanie Grisham said after the Capitol Times published its investigation into Gowan and other lawmakers' use of state fleet vehicles, the speaker instructed House staff to comb through his personal mileage reimbursement claims and cross reference those records with his fleet vehicle use to look for any travel reimbursements.

On Jan. 12, Gowan wrote a personal check to repay the state for the travel reimbursements and per diem payments he should not have claimed.

Grisham said $9,683 was due to reimbursements Gowan claimed for miles driven in a state vehicle, not a personal vehicle, and overestimating the distance on trips in his own car. Another $727 was repaid for using state fleet vehicles for personal business.

reimbursement for long-distance trips. And it now requires that travelers specify if they will use a privately owned vehicle and receive mileage reimbursement, or whether they plan to use a fleet vehicle and not seek mileage reimbursement.

When lawmakers and members of the House staff combine travel for official state business and non-official reasons, "reimbursement is strictly limited to those expenses incurred in furtherance of official House business," the policy states. Lawmakers would be on the hook for a campaign-related lunch in Washington, D.C., for example, but not the airplane ticket to get there, if they were also doing official business in the city.

Additionally, the House issued a new travel request form, with an additional question: Are travelers also being reimbursed from any other source for the travel?

And the policy states that Department of Administration regulations and policies, which govern how much state employees can spend on expenses such as travel-related meals, parking and hotels in a given geographic market, are only advisory and do not need to be followed.

One slide in a presentation prepared for training given to all House employees on the new policy declares that the "overarching duty is not to misspend the public's money, but elected officials and public employees shouldn't be on the hook for legitimate travel duties."

New Corporation Commissioner Tobin will take to the road

ANDY TOBIN

If you’re not sure what the Arizona Corporation Commission (ACC) is or does, don’t feel bad; you’re in good company. I’ve traveled all across this state as a former speaker of the Arizona House of Representatives and as the director of the departments of Weights and Measures, Insurance, and Financial Institutions.

I’m often asked, “What exactly does the Corporation Commission do?” That sends me a message: Maybe we need to reach out more. To me the question became how and where do we start that introduction, and whom do we engage? As the newest commissioner, I want to involve all Arizonans and bring the ACC directly to the people, especially those who live in rural Arizona.

When I was appointed by Governor Doug Ducey, I immediately saw a clear need and wonderful opportunity to take the ACC on the road to meet and hear the people who live outside Maricopa County. That’s why I’m taking the Corporation Commission “On the Road.” Our Open Meetings include topics that impact many crucial aspects of Arizona’s economy. Starting with the March Open Meeting, I’ll be teleconferencing with the other four commissioners in Phoenix from different parts of the state in an eight-month Rural Arizona Corporation Commission Tour. For the Open Meeting in March, I will be in Yuma County, in April Mohave County, and in May Navaho and Apache counties. Prior to each open meeting, I will have a town hall that will provide more information about the ACC and an opportunity to ask me questions or seek help with any ACC problems you may have.

Just how much power does the ACC wield over our lives? The ACC regulates electricity, natural gas, water and sewer, corporate filings, securities, pipelines, railroads, and much more. The five commissioners meet monthly to make decisions about these industries. The meetings are held in Phoenix and are attended mainly by those who live there or whose companies are based in Phoenix. Most of ACC’s employees live in Maricopa County.

The most prominent ACC activity is setting utility rates. The commissioners regularly vote on how much you pay every time you flip on a light, run your heater on those cool desert nights, or take refuge from the hot summer days in an air-conditioned house. In fact, the ACC may also affect how much you pay for that light bulb, heater, or air conditioner through appliance rebates ordered by the ACC and issued by the electric company.

Other Open Meeting items address water or wastewater services provided by private companies. The ACC sets those rates, too. A perennial challenge the ACC has grappled with is the numerous small water companies that have struggled for years to keep the water flowing and safe to drink. For those of you who are served by these companies, you know exactly what I’m talking about. In some really dire cases, the ACC has already stepped in and installed interim water company operators.

But that isn’t a long-term solution. These fledgling companies need additional assistance to repair critical infrastructure needs that would allow them to return to compliance with environmental and other regulatory standards for safe drinking water, or to become a more sound investment for larger and more stable water companies or municipalities to purchase. That’s why

I am an ardent supporter of HB2331, which would provide the ACC with $500,000 for grants to small water companies, most of which are in rural Arizona.

Even though the money is a fraction of what these companies need to get back on the right track, it is a crucial first step in a larger Arizona water strategy.

My top priority at the ACC is to ensure that every Arizonan, especially those who live in the far reaches of our state, have access to a reliable electrical grid, safe drinking water, and adequate sewage and wastewater facilities. These are resources not only necessary for comfortable living, but also essential to survival in the Desert Southwest. The stakes are high; the consequences of ACC action (or inaction) are real. We need you, the people, to weigh in and let your voice be heard at YOUR commission. I sincerely hope you can make it out. I’d love to meet you.

If you have any questions about next week, please give me a call or send me an email. My office number is (602) 542-3625 and my email address is Tobin-web@azcc.gov.

—Andy Tobin is a member of the Arizona Corporation Commission.

Southwest can become world's 5th largest economic engine

JULIO ESPINOZA, DOUG BRUHNKE AND LUIS NUÑEZ

During the past year the trend for a new Arizona-Sonora partnership has been set in motion by many players on both sides of the border including state and local governments, the private sector, academics, interest groups and advocates.

The days when Phoenix and Hermosillo were not collaborating are gone, and we see both Arizonans and Sonorans engaging actively in trade, investment, cooperation and political dialog. There is a new understanding on both sides of the border, but why is it so important to keep this momentum going? How can we foster the current mutual understanding and progress?

After Governor Ducey and Governor Pavlovich took office, they made clear that the Arizona-Sonora relationship was a priority for their administrations, and over the past year there have been very symbolic moments of trust at the Capitol level and at the City Hall level as well.

While the press has extensively covered the state level dialog and initiatives, this article will stress business and the city (metro) leadership in keeping the momentum going. While at the federal level there is an ongoing debate of the direction of U.S. foreign and national security policies, at the city and community level, every stakeholder understands that peace and stability can be achieved by international trade that translates into economic development. Helping the economy growing and redistributing the revenue can be achieved at a regional level only if we are able to enable and encourage decision makers (in the public and private sector) to meet, trust each other and work together for a new Arizona-Sonora (Economic) Partnership.

In March 2015 the richest man in the world, who happens to be Mexican, Carlos Slim, came to Phoenix thanks to the leadership of a handful of people led by Mike Patterson of Polsinelli, Hank Marshall with the city of Phoenix, Phoenix Business Journal and Global Chamber to talk about cross bordering opportunities. By the sidelines of the event, many conversations became business opportunities for Canadian, Mexican and U.S. companies. This was a token of advocacy of the business leaders of Arizona that recognize that our state needs to become more globalized in order to be an important economic engine in the American Southwest region.

At the metro level, last October, Phoenix Mayor Stanton led a trade mission that included a bipartisan group of five Arizona mayors to Mexico City to expand economic opportunities and exchange best business practices between small medium businesses. Mayor Mancera of Mexico City and Mayor Stanton signed a memorandum of understanding creating a Global Cities Economic Partnership between both cities.

That same month in the city of Tucson, Mayor Rothschild of Tucson and Ernesto Munro of Rocky Point led a group of mayors from Sonora and Arizona for meeting each other after the new Sonoran mayors took office in September, having for witnesses of honor the regional consuls of Mexico and the United States. This meeting provided a continuation of efforts already in place to strengthen the channels of communication at the local level, such as the Maricopa Association of Governments' Ari-Son Mega region project that was introduced in 2014 along with the BIEN (Building and International Economic Network) free business online database, for furthering the city level dialog and the business to business connections. BIEN has the support of important business leaders in Canada, Mexico and the U.S. and is envisioned to be the web search engine for the businessmen of NAFTA looking to expand operations in the North American region, reducing the hazard of business to business outreach.

While Phoenix concentrates the most advanced industrial clusters in Arizona, it is also clear that Tucson, besides being the natural logistical hub into Mexico for its geostrategic location and cultural closeness, is switching into the higher value industries. In January 2016, Mayor Rothschild, for the second year in a row, hosted the Borderlands Trade Conference for discussing how to make the most of the industrial clusters created by NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement). The city of Tucson, with the support of many mayors of Arizona, Sonora and Sinaloa, showed political leadership and positioned itself as the gateway of Arizona into Mexico leaving the door open for further economic interdependence.

On Feb. 10, the city of Phoenix hosted high level conversations at the office of Michael Patterson (Polsinelli), who has been a great advocate for the globalization of Arizona. With the secretary of economy of Sonora and his assistant secretary and directors for foreign trade, we discussed the current state and future of the Arizona-Sonora economic relationship from the traditional sectors (food and tourism industries) to the modern sectors (high end manufacturing and new technologies). We agreed on the fact that we have two complementary economies that need to move forward into more advanced industrial clusters at the small medium business level to the transnational corporation level.

NAFTA's assumption is that three economies of different sizes and with different capacities can supplement each other to be a competitive region in the global economy. This same premise applies to Arizona and Sonora and we can foster the bilateral interdependence in the best interest of both states if we manage to develop clusters and supply chains, utilizing the competitive advantages of both parties, to truly create a vibrant region. By attracting foreign and national investment to Arizona, hosting the headquarters and logistical operations in Arizona, while making the most of Mexico's business friendly environment (low operation costs and intellectual property enforcement), the American Southwest can truly become the fifth largest economic engine in the world with a population of about 60 million consumers and a GDP of USD $3 trillion.

For becoming a true haven of innovation in the desert, we all must continue nurturing the new Arizona-Sonora (Economic) Partnership at the metro level. That is why on Feb. 17, the Global Chamber hosted at DIRT, a high tech Canadian company based in Phoenix, the International State of the Metro. This was an event that showcased the extraordinary progress and remaining challenges for the Phoenix Metro area in positioning itself as an oasis of HEAATT in the desert: Health, Education, Aerospace/Aerial, Technology and Tourism. Mayor Greg Stanton was accompanied in this high level dialog with regional business leaders by Mayor John Giles of Mesa, Mayor John Lewis of Gilbert and Mayor Sharon Wolcott of Surprise.

On that day, we certainly confirmed that the Phoenix International State of the Metro is not only competitive and diverse but beneficial to our constituencies. Gilbert, Mesa, Phoenix and Surprise are leaders in attracting foreign and national direct investment to create high wage jobs that make Phoenix a global metropolitan area in which we all can live, study, work, prosper and retire. If Arizona is open to business, we need to make sure the handshaking diplomacy translates into jobs that boost the state and city economies and strengthen the Arizonan middle class while progressively graduating our most vulnerable minorities out of generational poverty.

If Phoenix is successful in its globalization efforts, the whole state will make progress, because Phoenix metro concentrates the largest share of companies that are engaged in foreign trade. We must remain steadfast in viewing progress in open, honest and transparent ways so that businesses in the metropolitan areas of Arizona and Sonora continue their interaction and growth. Many challenges remain, but if local government leaders along with business leaders are committed to cross-border trade, progress will accelerate.

Closing costly Guantanamo just makes sense, could save $85M a year

ANDREW GORDON

When I joined the Department of Homeland Security in the early months of the Obama administration, one of my first assignments was to be the DHS representative on the presidential commissions charged with reviewing all detainees at Guantanamo and coming up with a plan for closing Guantanamo.

During the 2008 presidential campaign, both Barack Obama and John McCain supported closing Guantanamo. Both acknowledged that it had become a huge symbolic recruiting tool for al-Qaida and, because of waterboarding and similar "enhanced interrogation techniques," Guantanamo was an obstacle in dealing with our allies both in Western Europe and the Middle East.

President George W. Bush's administration had already transferred or released more than 500 detainees from Guantanamo. The U.S. Supreme Court had ruled that the Bush administration's assumption that detainees held in Guantanamo were beyond the reach of U.S. courts was wrong. No detainee had been sent to Guantanamo since 2008, and from 2006 to 2008, only 20 detainees had been sent there. By the time Obama became president, the gates to Guantanamo were locked.

In light of all of that, President Obama's promise to close Guantanamo seemed imminently doable. But now, eight years later, Guantanamo is still open. President Obama is now making one last push to secure this part of his legacy and eliminate one of the greatest foreign policy and national security blunders in U.S. history.

A little more background helps understand why closing Guantanamo makes so much sense. At the beginning of the Obama administration there were 240 detainees in Guantanamo. After a thorough and painstaking review process involving the Department of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the CIA, the State Department, the Justice Department, the FBI, the National Counterterrorism Center and Homeland Security, we unanimously concluded that the overwhelming majority of the detainees did not present a significant security risk to the U.S. As a result of that review, we have been able to transfer 147 detainees, leaving 91 detainees in Guantanamo today.

Currently there are plans to transfer 35 more. Of the remaining 56, several have been convicted or are in trial. When that process is over, there will only be 40 or so detainees left at Guantanamo.

The Guantanamo detention facility costs $450,000,000 a year to operate. If we close Guantanamo and bring those few detainees stateside to a maximum security facility, we can probably save around $85 million a year.

The primary argument for not closing Guantanamo is how can we bring such dangerous people into the United States, even into a maximum security facility?

The fact is we have a proven successful track record. We have tried, convicted and imprisoned more than a dozen high profile terrorists in the last eight years. Not one has escaped or created a threat to the U.S. If we are so concerned about U.S. safety and hold our detention system in such low regard, why are we trying to extradite the notorious cartel leader, El Chapo, who's responsible for killing thousands of people?

It is time to solve this problem, rather than making political hay of it. If Senator McCain or others have a better plan, bring it on. Otherwise help end this blight.

Senate approves voucher plan, but it faces a roadblock in the House

HANK STEPHENSON

Arizona Capitol Times

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

State senators voted Feb. 22 to do what foes have argued has been their agenda all along — allow every one of the 1.1 million students in Arizona to attend private and parochial schools with tax dollars.

The 17-13 vote starts the process of removing all the restrictions that now exist for vouchers, restrictions that to date limit enrollment in the program to no more than 5,500 students. Current law makes these “empowerment scholarship accounts” available only to students with special needs, those living on reservations and youngsters in schools rated D or F.

The measure encountered a setback on Feb. 24, however, when the House of Representatives postponed a debate on the bill. Several Republicans said the measure, doesn’t have the votes to pass in the lower chamber.

Republican Rep. Justin Olson’s HB2482 is a mirror bill to Republican Sen. Debbie Lesko’s SB1279.

The bill was scheduled to go up for a debate in the House Committee of the Whole, but lawmakers skipped the legislation at the last minute amid talks that several Republicans and many Democrats planned to vote against it.

Republican Rep. T.J. Shope of Coolidge told his leadership team that he plans to vote against the bill. But he said GOP leadership has not given up hope on it, and House Republican Whip David Livingston is still attempting to get to the 31 votes necessary for the bill.

“He said they’re really close,” Shope said of Livingston.

Large-scale expansions of the ESA program repeatedly have been shut down in the House.

Last year, Lesko’s big ESA expansion bill, SB1088 (empowerment scholarship accounts; eligibility), was scheduled for debate in the House three times before the bill finally died without ever going up for debate.

In 2014, the House killed another ESA expansion bill sponsored by Lesko, who was in the lower chamber at the time.

After scheduling that bill for debate three times, and postponing it three times, House lawmakers finally approved it in debate, only to kill the measure on a 27-31 third read vote moments later.

Under the bill as approved by the Senate, all restrictions on vouchers would be gone by the 2018 school year. And the following year, the numerical cap on vouchers, currently 0.5 percent of all students in public schools, would self-destruct.

The only restriction that would be left is that a student first has to attend a public school. But that need not be for more than 100 days. And it could be in kindergarten.

“It’s a huge step forward for school choice for our parents and students throughout the state,” Lesko said.

Sen. Steve Farley, D-Tucson, had a different take.

STOCK PHOTO

Sen. Steve Farley

Sen. Debbie Lesko

“This is the end of public education in Arizona,” he said, calling it “an abomination.”

Farley pointed out that the first vouchers were approved in 2011 for “a small number of kids with very specific needs.

“Let’s be clear on what this is,” Farley said. “This blows that out of the water.”

He also said the timing could not be worse.

Farley pointed out the legislation comes ahead of a May 17 special election for Proposition 123. Voters are being asked to divert money already in an education trust account to make up for the fact that lawmakers failed to comply with a voter-approved law to increase state aid to public schools annually to account for inflation.

“If we think we’re going to get voters to vote on (Proposition) 123 at the same time as we’re gutting our public school system with bills like this that would devastate the public school system, I don’t know how we think we’re going to make that sale,” Farley said.

Lesko said the move actually saves money.

She said the average voucher for a student without special needs is about $5,000 a year. By contrast, Lesko put total aid to public schools in excess of $9,000 a year.

But that includes money raised by local taxpayers as well as federal aid. The most recent state aid figures according to legislative analysts comes to about $5,400.

And Farley said all that ignores the fact that there will be children for whom going to a private or parochial school is not a realistic option.

Those schools generally do not provide transportation. And Farley said not all parents make the right decisions for their children.

He said that leaves those children in a system with “decaying infrastructure, lack of computers, lack of teachers, lack of books.”

“And we end up with the ghettoization of public education,” Farley said.

Farley said the program has had problems with fraud and the lack of accountability in ensuring that parents are spending the money properly.

He said the Department of Education, which is supposed to monitor the outlays, cannot keep pace with what is already out there.

Lesko said foes always paint the worst possible picture.

She said there were similar arguments when Arizona allowed the formation of charter schools. Lesko also said there was opposition to open enrollment, which allows a student to attend any public or charter school in the state that has room rather than the local neighborhood school. ■

Ducey begins phase-out of boards and commissions

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

An audit aimed at eliminating some of the 200-plus boards and commissions in state government is still underway, but Gov. Doug Ducey isn't waiting for the full results to get started on his plan.

Ducey's primary vehicle for paring down the number of boards and commissions in Arizona is HB2600. A strike-everything amendment to that bill would abolish the Arizona State Parks Board, Water Quality Assurance Revolving Fund Advisory Board, Citizens Transportation Oversight Committee, State Wildland-Urban Fire Safety Committee and Advisory Board of the Arizona State Library, Archives and Public Records.

That proposal began with the Arizona State Parks Board, said Gretchen Martinez, Ducey's legislative affairs director. A 2012 law overhauling the state's personnel system, which was championed by then-Gov. Jan Brewer, shifted authority for hiring the state parks director from the board to the governor. Since the governor now exercises decision-making authority similar to that of the parks board, Martinez said it make no sense to continue the status quo.

"It created a huge inefficiency in the operation of that agency," Martinez said. "The parks director ... she doesn't need to be reporting to two different groups of people."

Another part of Ducey's legislative agenda, HB2501, addresses issues surrounding a handful of regulatory boards, but in a far different way than that board and commission elimination bill. Rather than consolidate or eliminate boards and commissions, the bill seeks savings and efficiencies by putting them all under one roof and under the administrative authority of the Department of Health Services.

Under HB2501, 17 regulatory boards for health care professions would come under DHS's purview, starting in fiscal year 2017 with the boards that oversee acupuncturists, dispensing opticians, homeopathic medicine practitioners, occupational therapists and respiratory care professionals. By fiscal year 2020, the Arizona Medical Board, the Arizona State Board of Nursing and the Arizona Regulatory Board of Physician Assistants will have made the move as well.

The bill does not strip any of the regulatory boards of their licensing and regulatory authority, but does shift some power to the DHS director. The director's approval will be required for any of the boards to enter into new contracts or renew existing ones, and the director will have the power to hire and fire the heads of the regulatory boards.

"There will be no difference in how a licensee is licensed or reprimanded. Those are not reviewable by the director," Ducey adviser Christina Corieri told the House Health Committee

UNDER HB2600, THE FOLLOWING BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS WOULD BE ELIMINATED

- Citizens Transportation Oversight Committee
- State Wildland-Urban Fire Safety Committee
- Advisory Board of the Arizona State Library, Archives and Public Records
- Water Quality Assurance Revolving Fund Advisory Board
- Arizona State Parks Board, whose duties would shift to the state parks director

UNDER HB2501, THE FOLLOWING REGULATORY BOARDS WOULD FALL UNDER THE ADMINISTRATIVE AUTHORITY OF THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH SERVICES

- In fiscal year 2017, the Acupuncture Board of Examiners, State Board of Dispensing Opticians, Board of Homeopathic and Integrated Medicine Examiners, Board of Occupational Therapy Examiners and Board of Respiratory Care Examiners
- In FY18, the State Board of Podiatry Examiners, Naturopathic Physicians Medical Board, State Board of Optometry, State Board of Chiropractic Examiners and Medical Radiologic Technology Board of Examiners
- In FY19, the Arizona Board of Osteopathic Examiners in Medicine and Surgery, State Board of Dental Examiners and Board of Behavioral Health Examiners
- In FY20, Arizona Regulatory Board of Physician Assistants, Arizona State Board of Nursing and Arizona Medical Board

during a hearing for HB2501.

Furthermore, the director must review all rules approved by the boards to ensure they won't have a "material anticompetitive effect." If a rule will have such an effect and isn't necessary to protect public health, the director would be empowered to reject it. That proposed law is intended to bring Arizona into conformance with the U.S. Supreme Court's 2015 ruling in North Carolina Board of Dental Examiners v. Federal Trade Commission, in which the high court struck down a rule requiring teeth whitening businesses to be run by licensed dentists, ruling that the regulation was intended to stifle competition.

Martinez said she expects HB2501 to save money on rent, IT services, human resource services and other aspects that the myriad health-related boards can now share. Ducey spokesman Daniel Scarpinato noted that the move could save money on contracts for things like lobbying and public relations.

"It's a treasure trove of government waste. And I think part of the reason you're seeing opposition and you'll see a lot more opposition is because these are a huge money maker for the Capitol industrial complex," Scarpinato said.

But the savings from the "90-10 boards," so known because they keep 90 percent of the revenue they generate and send 10 percent back to the general fund, won't necessarily go to the state. Martinez said the Ducey administration is keen on passing the savings onto the people who pay for professional licensing that the commissions oversee.

CONCERN ABOUT STATE PARKS BOARD

Advocates of some of the entities that are on the chopping block are not pleased. And much of the pushback revolves around the Arizona State Parks Board.

Sandy Bahr, director of the Sierra Club's Grand Canyon Chapter, said the parks board is important because it represents a number of interests and geographic regions from across the state. Eliminating the board, she said, would block an avenue by which stakeholders provide valuable input about the parks system.

"I can understand why one state parks director or assistant director would want to get rid of them, because yeah, it's messy. It is messy and it takes more time to listen to people, to engage with people, to have dialogue and to disagree. And it sounds like there's been some disagreement," Bahr said.

Others were uneasy with the concept in general, or at least in doing it with what some critics alleged was a lack of outside input, along with perhaps too broad a mandate in one piece of legislation. Rep. Lela Alston, D-Phoenix, objected to the idea of eliminating a slew of boards in one fell swoop.

"I think we need to very carefully look at the purposes being served and really give adequate notice to the people who are involved," she said during a committee hearing.

Similarly, Democratic lawmakers had some reservations about HB2501, the health board bill. House Minority Leader Eric Meyer, D-Paradise Valley, questioned whether the bill was even necessary, and said he was wary of putting a new level of oversight over boards and commissions whose directors already answer to the governor. Even some GOP lawmakers, such as Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix, expressed hesitation over removing the independence of the regulatory boards.

Martinez predicted that as HB2600 works its way through the process, ideas would bubble up about more entities that should end up on the scrap heap. She noted that Alston, who expressed reservations in the House Government and Higher Education Committee, even had a suggestion of her own.

Before Alston voted against HB2600, she said, "I have been struggling with a particular board and commission over the past couple of years, and that would be the State Fair and Exposition Board. And I wonder if you would consider if this bill goes forward a floor amendment that would consider that board as well."

NEED FOR MORE OVERSIGHT

Scarpinato said the elimination of boards and commissions deemed unnecessary will be an ongoing practice for the remainder of the Ducey administration. In October, the Governor's Office sent several thousand questionnaires to the members of about 220 boards and commissions along with their executive directors, seeking detailed information about the entities' makeup, functions and operations. The Governor's Office said one goal of the questionnaires was to provide data that could be used to determine which boards and commissions were unnecessary and could be eliminated.

The questionnaire results have not been particularly encouraging, according to the Ducey administration. Scarpinato said a "big chunk" of the board and commission members who received the survey never responded to it, which he said was telling.

"Frankly, that speaks to the need to have a lot more oversight on these boards and commissions which have operated really in the dark of the night, so to speak, for now many years and are accountable really to no one. I mean, you can't even get them to respond to a questionnaire," Scarpinato said. "We really started that because we wanted to know more. And really we can't even get the basic information in many cases. So there's a real problem here." ■

Senators foil revival of 3 tough immigration bills

ben.giles@azcapitoltimes.com

A handful of Senate Republicans, some of them trying to avoid a return of the divisive days of 2010, foiled a revival of immigration enforcement legislation Feb. 22.

The Senate struck down a bill to place stringent requirements on city-issued identification cards, SB1017, and one to penalize cities for providing sanctuary for illegal immigrants, SB1378.

Sens. Bob Worsley, R-Mesa, Adam Driggs, R-Phoenix, and Steve Pierce, R-Flagstaff, voted with Democrats against

“I don’t want to see immigration bills become bills du jour in this Legislature again.”

— Sen. Bob Worsley, R-Mesa

the bills. Sen. Carlyle Begay, a Ganado Republican who switched parties in November, joined the three Republicans in siding with Democrats against SB1378.

Worsley said it is time to turn the page on illegal immigration because it is no longer the problem it was five years ago as net migration is now to the south, with more people going to Mexico than coming to Arizona.

“I don’t want to see immigration bills become bills du jour in this Legislature again,” Worsley said.

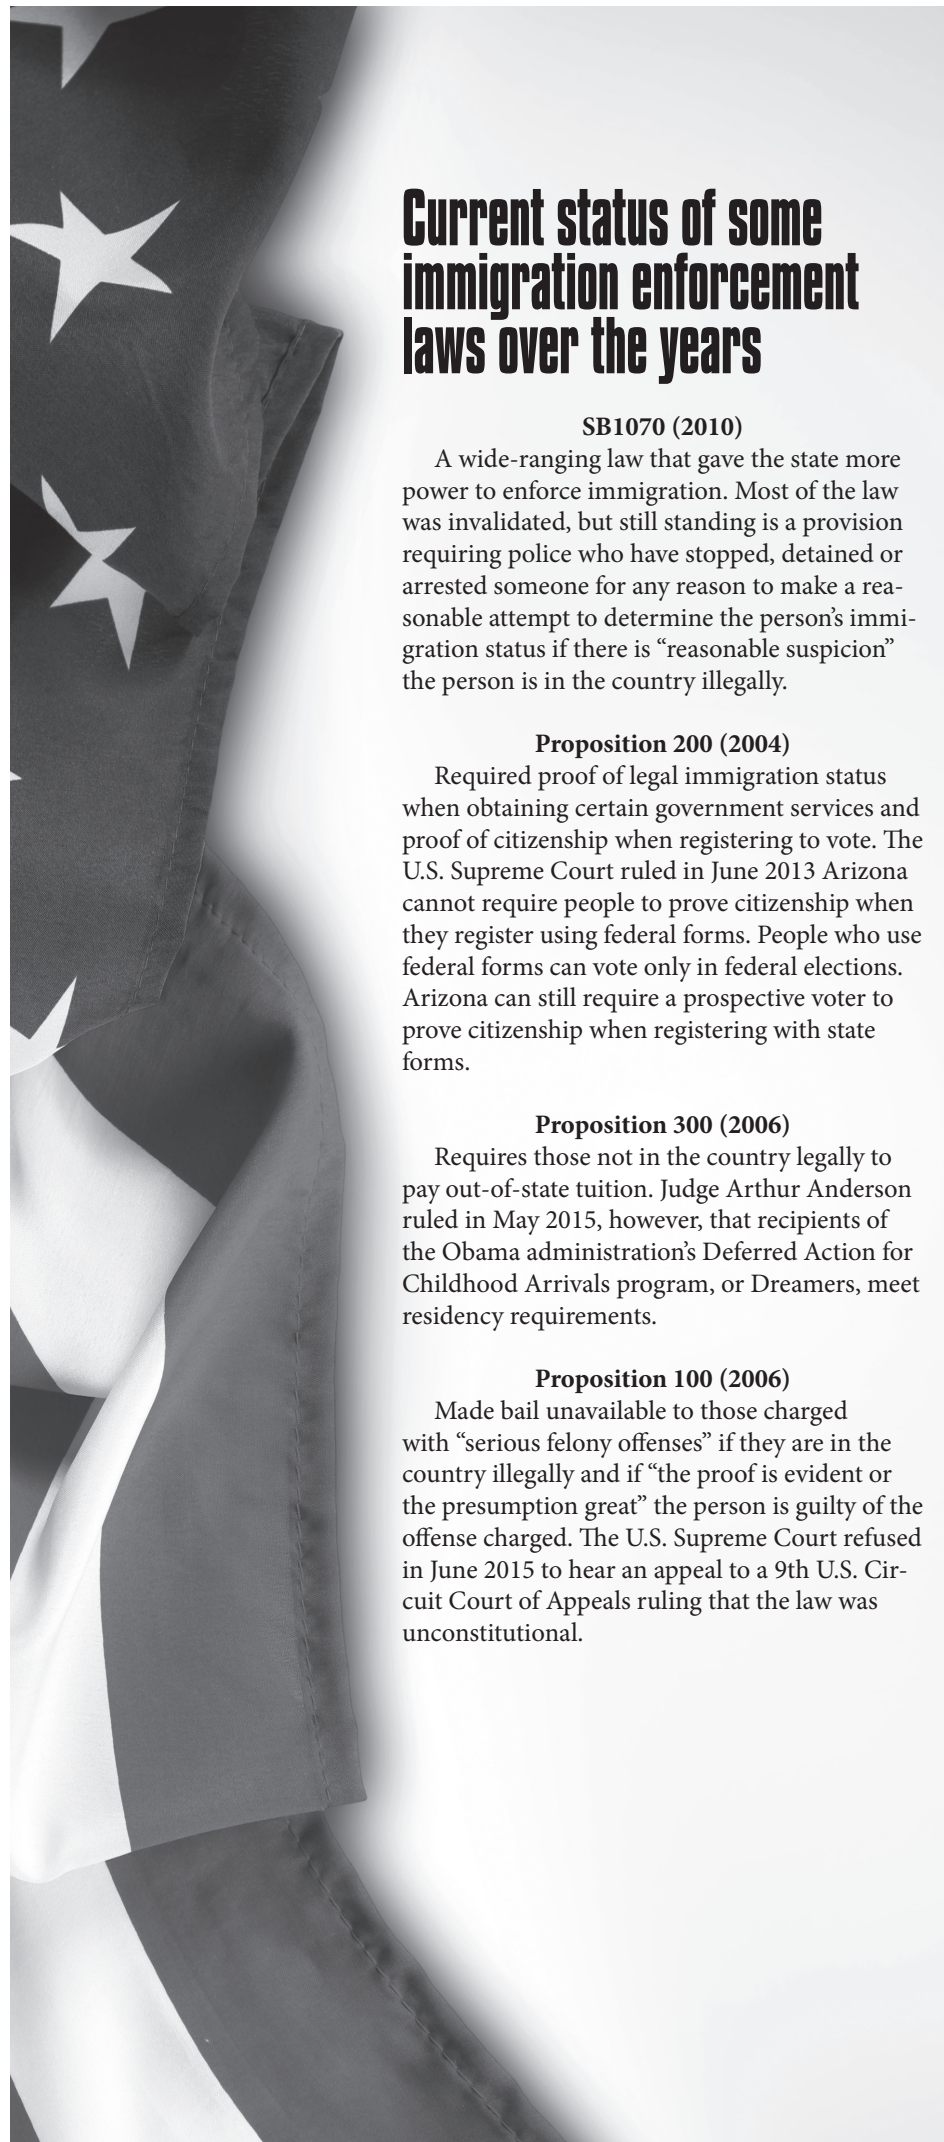

And while there certainly wasn’t an immigration bill du jour during the height of the Arizona Legislature’s struggle in controlling illegal immigration, roughly 2004 to 2011, there was an aggressive push for lawmakers to wade into immigration enforcement.

And with that came national scrutiny and criticism of Arizona’s policies, and loud, emotional protests at the Capitol.

Driggs and Pierce in 2010 voted for the most well-known and controversial of the measures, SB1070, a wide-ranging measure aimed at giving the state more power to enforce immigration.

Courts stripped away most of the provisions after the Obama administration challenged the law, but one of the core provisions survived. It requires police who have stopped a person on suspicion of violating a state law to question the person about their immigration status if there is reason to believe they are in the country illegally.

In the buildup to SB1070, voters passed referendums requiring prospective voters to provide concrete proof of citizenship, prohibiting in-state tuition

Current status of some immigration enforcement laws over the years

SB1070 (2010)

A wide-ranging law that gave the state more power to enforce immigration. Most of the law was invalidated, but still standing is a provision requiring police who have stopped, detained or arrested someone for any reason to make a reasonable attempt to determine the person’s immigration status if there is “reasonable suspicion” the person is in the country illegally.

Proposition 200 (2004)

Required proof of legal immigration status when obtaining certain government services and proof of citizenship when registering to vote. The U.S. Supreme Court ruled in June 2013 Arizona cannot require people to prove citizenship when they register using federal forms. People who use federal forms can vote only in federal elections. Arizona can still require a prospective voter to prove citizenship when registering with state forms.

Proposition 300 (2006)

Requires those not in the country legally to pay out-of-state tuition. Judge Arthur Anderson ruled in May 2015, however, that recipients of the Obama administration’s Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, or Dreamers, meet residency requirements.

Proposition 100 (2006)

Made bail unavailable to those charged with “serious felony offenses” if they are in the country illegally and if “the proof is evident or the presumption great” the person is guilty of the offense charged. The U.S. Supreme Court refused in June 2015 to hear an appeal to a 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that the law was unconstitutional.

The Senate that day resoundingly rejected five immigration bills. Two of them were so-called birthright bills, aimed at getting the U.S. Supreme Court to revisit the issue of U.S. citizenship. The other bills proposed among other things to deny illegal immigrants access to state benefits, require hospitals to verify a person’s immigration status at some point during giving care, and require the Arizona Department of Education to collect data on people who couldn’t prove their lawful presence in the U.S.

Ten Republicans sided with Democrats to kill the host of bills.

Former Senate President Russell Pearce, sponsor of SB1070 and many immigration enforcement laws over the years, was successfully recalled in October 2011, effectively putting an end to that type of legislation.

TRYING TO KEEP THE FIGHT ALIVE

Sen. Steve Smith, R-Maricopa, has tried to keep the fight alive, introducing bills over the years that would require government documents be written in English only and requiring the Department of Education to count illegal immigrant students, but the bills died.

Smith chairs the Senate Public Safety, Military and Technology Committee, where he held hearings for his bills this year.

Smith sponsored SB1378, the sanctuary measure. Sen. John Kavanagh, R-Fountain Hills, a veteran lawmaker from the SB1070 days and a member of the Public Safety, Military and Technology Committee, sponsored SB1017, the ID card bill.

Smith also sponsored SB1377, bill requiring judges to sentence illegal immigrants convicted of a felony to prison, which easily passed a vote of the full Senate.

The bill is known as Grant’s Law in honor Grant Ronnebeck, a Mesa convenience-store clerk who was gunned down by a suspected illegal immigrant who was on probation for a 2012 burglary conviction and free on bond pending immigration proceedings.

Worsley said there are some lawmakers still living in the past.

“And it’s time for the state to put on a new image, put on a new image of we’re focusing on the right things. I just don’t want to see this whole immigration thing get traction again,” Worsley said.

Driggs attributed the return of the immigration debate to presidential candidate Donald Trump’s success.

He said while there was some fatigue after SB1070, there was also the realization that states are very limited in what they can do with immigration enforcement because federal immigration law is supreme.

“So, there’s been a lot of fanning of the flames by both sides, but at the end of the day, it’s the same.”

for students unlawfully present in the U.S., and withholding bail for suspected criminals in the U.S. unlawfully.

The courts have either gutted those measures or ruled they are unconstitutional.

IMMIGRATION BILLS END ABRUPTLY

The Legislature’s appetite for immigration laws came to an end on March 17, 2011.

Reports show House travel spending more than doubled

HANK STEPHENSON

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

The House is required to report its spending to the Arizona Department of Administration's General Accounting Office. Although those records don't detail which lawmakers or staff the chamber's travel expenses were on behalf of, they offer a glimpse of the chamber's spending on travel in the past year.

And the records show that spending on travel has more than doubled under House Speaker David Gowan.

In 2015, House lawmakers and their staff spent $72,000 on traveling.

That's more than the House spent in 2013 and 2014 combined, when the chamber spent about $32,000 and $33,000, respectively.

The travel-related expenses are shown in several categories.

In 2015, the chamber spent more than $23,000 on air fare, mostly for trips out of the state. The House spent another $37,000 on travel-related lodging, the vast majority of which was for out-of-state travel, and spent almost $7,000 on meals, mostly outside Arizona. House lawmakers and staff members spent another $5,000 on miscellaneous travel expenses.

That doesn't include mileage reimbursement for travel, which the General Accounting Office does not list separately from lawmakers' daily mileage reimbursement for their trips to and from the Capitol.

By comparison, the Senate, which has half the number of lawmakers, about half the employees and roughly half the budget of the House, spent about 2 percent of what the House spent on travel in 2015.

According to records provided by the chamber and verified through the General Accounting Office, the Senate spent $1,200 on lodging in 2015, another $250 on meals and nothing on air fare.

Senate President Andy Biggs said his chamber rarely approves travel requests, and when senators ask him for one, he tells them they need to find a way to pay for it on their own.

"Our policy is we don't do it," he said.

Though the General Accounting Office's data doesn't tie travel expenditures to individual House lawmakers or staffers, it does list a date for each expenditure.

At least one of the large batches of spending matches up with a trip Gowan took with several of his top staffers to Washington, D.C.

On March 2, 2015, Gowan was in Washington, D.C., to watch U.S. Supreme Court arguments on the Legislature's challenge to the authority of the Arizona Independent Redistricting Commission. Gowan flew cross-country with an entourage that included the House attorney, the House GOP spokeswoman, a policy adviser and a deputy chief of staff. The chamber at the time acknowledged taxpayers paid travel costs for all of them.

In the following weeks, the House reported travel expenses of almost $13,000.

On March 9, the House posted an expense of $3,500 for out-of-state air fare. About a week later, the chamber posted a host of travel related expenses, including another $1,700 in air fare, $5,600 in out-of-state lodging, $1,000 in meals and another $1,000 in miscellaneous travel expenses.

The House would not provide its own documentation on the cost of that trip.

Biggs, on the other hand, paid his own way to watch the Supreme Court hear arguments in the case and didn't bring the Senate attorney, who was one of the Legislature's lawyers in the case.

In late September, records show House out-of-state travel jumped to more than $17,000 over a two-week period.

Late October and early November were also heavy times for taxpayer-funded travel: The House spent $12,000 on travel over a roughly two-week period.

House GOP spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said travel expenses are generally posted in the weeks before and after an event.

"We did a quick look at travel, and I do see that there was a good amount of travel in those months – for instance, in September we were conducting intern recruitment, and it looks like the Chief Clerk's Office had some professional development conferences," she said, adding those were not the only trips in that period.

Grisham declined to provide documen-

Gowan's use of state fleet vehicles, and found that every fleet rental was "supported by" valid business travel. But she acknowledged that, in some instances, the "rental period exceeded what appeared to be the necessary length of time to fulfill the travel requirement."

"To err on the side of caution, the speaker wanted to reimburse the state for even those kinds of scenarios," she said.

State law is strict on the use of state vehicles, and it prohibits state employees and lawmakers from using the vehicles for normal commuting to and from home. Using a state vehicle for personal business is a Class 2 misdemeanor under state law.

House staff also reviewed travel records for House Majority Leader Steve Montenegro, Republican Rep. Darin Mitchell and House Sergeant-at-Arms Billy Cloud, and found no improper travel reimbursements while they were driving state vehicles, Grisham said.

Gowan repaid state

The repayment also included $1,655 for days he had claimed to work but did not.

Grisham said the largest error happened after Gowan's assistant "assumed incorrectly" that he was driving his personal vehicle when in fact he was using a state-owned vehicle.

"The lack of communication among staff accounts for the vast majority of over-reimbursement," Grisham wrote in an email.

Lawmakers are required to file travel reimbursement forms in order to qualify for the repayments, though the old form, which the House has since changed, did not require a lawmaker's signature. The House has not provided those forms in response to a Jan. 19 public records request.

Grisham said House staff also reviewed tation on how much the House spent on the intern recruitment or professional development conference.

There also are nearly four weeks of missing spending information in the General Accounting Office's records, making it unclear if any additional travel expenditures were made. No expenses for the House were recorded between June 29 and July 22, 2015.

Grisham said the gap was due to vacation schedules by the staff that usually inputs the data, and because the House was transitioning a new accounting system.

"The state payroll system paid salaries, but did not post to the new accounting system," she said in an email. ■

The review of Gowan's records also showed another $1,655 in per-diem payments made to Gowan for "unconfirmed events on the speaker's calendar," Grisham said.

"In every case where doubt existed, we resolved it in favor of disqualifying the per diem," she said.

The Arizona Capitol Times filed public records requests for documents detailing Gowan's reimbursements from the state for daily per-diem payments and personal vehicle use on Jan. 19 and 28, but the House has not provided those records. A portion of those requests was expected to be filled Feb. 25, Grisham said.

Grisham acknowledged in a Feb. 18 email that Gowan repaid the travel reimbursements. The email was in response to questions about irregular repayments for House travel expenses listed in the Arizona Department of Administration's General Accounting Office's records.

The per diem repayment was disclosed in a Feb. 23 email.

"There is no indication that the speaker knowingly or intentionally claimed non-reimbursable mileage; he directed us to review the records; and he promptly repaid the over-reimbursement amount when the error was revealed," she wrote in a follow-up email.

State law dictates that, in order to receive reimbursements for travel expenses and per diem, lawmakers "shall submit a claim therefore countersigned by the presiding officer of the respective body."

Grisham said Gowan didn't personally sign his per diem claim forms, which are processed with a digital signature by the speaker's designee.

The House has not provided those per diem claim forms in response to a Jan. 28 public records request made of both legislative chambers. The Senate provided detailed records of mileage and per-diem claims on Feb. 5. ■

Montenegro repays ALEC for travel stipend

hank.stephenson@azcapitoltimes.com

House Majority Leader Steve Montenegro has repaid the American Legislative Exchange Council for a travel stipend he received for attending the organization's July 2015 conference in San Diego, which he drove to at no personal cost while using a state fleet vehicle.

Montenegro had requested his travel be reimbursed roughly $300 by the organization, based on the federal mileage rate for the approximately 600 miles he drove from his home in Litchfield Park to the annual conference in San Diego.

But taxpayers were already covering the cost of his state-owned rental car and the gas to get to the conference.

The House paid the Department of Administration $315 for Montenegro's six-day utility 4x4 rental and gas to and from San Diego.

But Montenegro filled out a form requesting a travel "scholarship" to pay for his travel expenses to the ALEC conference.

The scholarships are paid for by lobbyists and corporations that donate to the ALEC scholarship fund to cover lawmakers' expenses to the organization's conferences.

House GOP spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said that, upon realizing he had been "mistakenly" reimbursed by ALEC, Montenegro "promptly" repaid the organization from his own funds, not from House monies.

House Speaker David Gowan and Republican Rep. Darin Mitchell both drove state vehicles to the event, but neither requested the organization reimburse them for their travel, Grisham said.

House attorney Rob Ellman wrote in a Feb. 9 email that "ALEC mistakenly reimbursed the Majority Leader for his travel mileage." Grisham said Montenegro realized the error himself, and offered to repay the costs following an Arizona Capitol Times article detailing the House's use of state fleet vehicles.

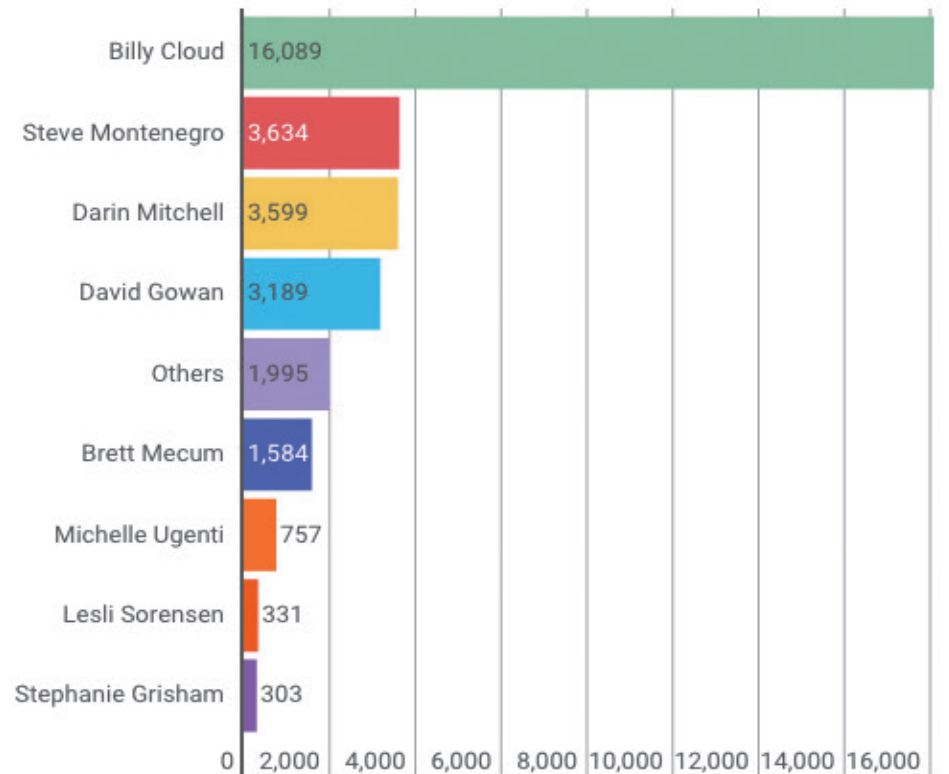

But ALEC's Arizona chair, Republican Sen. Debbie Lesko, said that isn't what happened.

Lesko said that, after reading that the three lawmakers drove state cars to the ALEC event, she went back and checked if any of them had requested travel scholarships to attend. She found that Montenegro had filled out a form requesting a reimbursement for driving to the event.

When she discovered ALEC had reimbursed Montenegro, even though the taxpayers had already paid for his travel, she asked Montenegro to return the money.

He did so the next day, Lesko said.

2015 motor pool miles

Montenegro acknowledged to the Capitol Times in a Jan. 8 story on fleet vehicle use that he broke state rules governing fleet vehicle use by driving to the event with his wife. State law bars friends and family from traveling in state vehicles.

The House pays the cost of rentals and gas for lawmakers and their staff who use the Arizona Department of Administration's fleet vehicles for "official state business."

Using a state vehicle for personal business is a Class 2 misdemeanor under state law.

But Ellman, the House attorney, wrote in a Feb. 9 letter to the Capitol Times that the private conservative organization's annual conference qualifies as an official state business purpose for elected officials.

"(You) should know that the annual ALEC conference is attended by state lawmakers from around the nation who meet with nationally renowned business leaders and policy experts specifically to discuss state policy and legislation. Attending such a conference is a quintessentially valid House business purpose. It is not a misuse of state funds to travel to an annual ALEC conference," he wrote.

However, Lesko disagreed.

She noted that the state doesn't pay for lawmakers' travel or hotel or conference registration to ALEC events, and said the event is not official state business.

"We pay private membership dues. It does not come out of state money. It comes out of my personal pocket, and I'm a member of it. It's a private organization," she said, noting she never uses state resources to attend the event.

ALEC's national spokesperson did not return multiple calls for comment.

Legislatures around the country don't usually pay for lawmakers to attend ALEC conferences. And that's by design, according to the Center for Media and Democracy.

Nick Surgy, director of research for the Center for Media and Democracy, which runs the website ALECexposed.org and does investigative work on ALEC, said Montenegro appears to be caught in a classic case of "double-dipping," and that repaying the funds doesn't mean he didn't do any wrong.

"That's like putting the cookie back in the jar after you're caught. I mean, you were going to eat the cookie," he said.

Surgy said his organization has run into states vehemently claiming the event is not state business, and other states that just as strongly claim it is official state business.

"In terms of this question of whether it's state business, it seems to come down to whether it's convenient for it to be state business," he said.

In Texas, for example, the Center for Media and Democracy attempted to get public records relating to the event from a lawmaker who attended one of ALEC's conferences. The lawmaker argued that his attendance at ALEC events was not official state business and he therefore didn't have to turn over public records related to the event.

"This seems to be the far opposite argument, which is that this is state business in the interest of the state, and therefore perfectly acceptable to use state vehicles," Surgy said.

But such an argument could open up a can of worms for ALEC, which generally attempts to keep its activities hidden from the public.

If lawmakers attend an event in their official capacity, documents they receive at that event could fall under public records laws.

Attorney Kory Langhofer said the argument that the ALEC conference is official business would open the organization up to public records requests. www.azcapitoltimes.com

REAL ESTATE & CONSTRUCTION

Lack of skilled labor haunts Arizona's construction industry

LUIGE DEL PUERTO

luige.delpuerto@azcapitoltimes.com

Early this month, Mark Flynn, a construction industry veteran and owner of an electrical company in Tucson, appeared at an annual rite: a competition among high school students learning construction trades, such as carpentry and cabinet making.

As he judged the competition, Flynn couldn't help but note that today's craftsmen are graying and pushing retirement.

"When you drive around Phoenix, if you see an HVAC or electrical contractor truck or plumbing truck, just look at who's behind the wheel," he told the Arizona Capitol Times. "You're going to see a few young guys, but most of the guys are going to be white haired."

The trades, he said, are passed down from expert to intern. Sure, some things can be learned from school, but to really master a craft, one has to be on site, absorbing how things are done and getting practical experience.

"How to bend a piece of rigid conduit, how to tug wire, how to strip wire – it's something you watch a guy do, and the guy shows you how to do it, and you do it," Flynn said.

But aging masters have fewer and fewer interns to pass their knowledge to.

And that, he hastened to add, is a big problem.

"We're running out of skilled people in all the trades," he lamented.

The lack of skilled labor haunts not only Arizona's construction industry. It is endemic nationwide, and it is becoming more pronounced even as the construction industry steadily recovers from the great real estate crash of the last decade.

A recent survey by the National Association of Home Builders shows that cost and the availability of labor top the list of builders' problems, and they expect it to become more acute this year.

Another survey shows a critical shortage for basic skills, such as carpentry.

Experts cite several reasons why. One of them is that Arizona is simply not attracting as many migrants as before. Migrants had been a reliable source of labor for the housing industry. But when the economy crashed a decade ago, the state's robust immigration flows slowed, and they have yet to fully recover. Some also suspect that the state's crackdown on illegal immigrants triggered by SB1070 might have played a part, noting that hiring undocumented workers posed no legal threat to businesses before.

NAHB expert David Crowe said based on research, only about 40 percent of construction workers during the peak had returned to the industry today.

Of the 60 percent who never returned, a good chunk remained unemployed, he said, although he added that many found jobs elsewhere, such as in the energy sector.

The lack of workers can lead to a self-defeating spiral: It means builders can't build fast enough to meet rising demands. It can push wages up, which means it would be more expensive to build, which, in turn, can push up prices of homes, which can price out some buyers, potentially depressing sales.

Joint Technical Education District students who are learning construction trades take part in an annual competition called Construction SkillsUSA at the Catalina Magnet High School in Tucson early in February.

In the short run, the shortage of skilled labor can constrain the housing market's full recovery.

And this is where industry advocates say career and technical education comes in: It helps fill some of that gap by graduating students who could be employable by the time they leave high school.

This is also why last year's cut to the Joint Technical Education District program, which has since been reversed, came as such a huge blow to the sector, they said.

Crowe, the housing expert, said the lack of skilled labor is also attributable to the decline in support for vocational and technical schools following the economic crash.

Nationwide, those schools had provided opportunities for students to join the construction sector. At the time, the work was an attractive career prospect.

Crowe said the crash, which led to state revenues drying up, forced cutbacks all across the country. Among those that were hit were the vocational and technical training schools.

And suddenly, construction work no longer seemed as attractive to students.

Alan Storm, the superintendent of Pima's JTED program, can attest to that.

During the crisis, high school enrollment in the construction program dropped, he noted.

"And, I assumed parents were saying to kids, 'You don't want to take those classes. There are no jobs,'" Storm said.

JTED advocates and experts say technical education programs help fill the gap as the country experiences a critical shortage in skilled labor.

Lack of skilled labor

But Arizona's actions last year certainly didn't help, JTED advocates said.

In the rush to pass a budget, lawmakers approved a $30 million cut to the JTED program. The cut caught many off guard, but, depending on whose version of events is offered, the train had already left the station. There was nothing left to do, except gnash one's teeth and wait for the next legislative session.

Months later, the JTED cut, which was supposed to take effect this July, had become the single most loathed budget provision of 2015.

To Doug Pruitt, the retired CEO of Sundt Construction, the cut didn't make any sense.

"You have an incredible group of skilled craft workers who are leaving every day because (they're) baby boomers, and they're retiring," he said. "They're not being replaced because we're not graduating carpenters and electricians and plumbers, et cetera, of any magnitude out of schools, and that's where they used to come from."

He said every penny the state allocates for career and technical education is worth it. He cited what has since become a familiar list of advocacy points for JTEDs: lower dropout rates, employable graduates.

The program also pays for itself by steering kids away from a life of welfare, unemployment, underemployment – or worse, incarceration, he said.

"The social cost of not addressing this is very expensive and non-productive. This lack of investment is also making Arizona and this country less competitive in the global economy," he complained early in January, adding that the program needed more, not less financial support.

When lawmakers convened this January, a consensus had already emerged: It must be reversed. Gov. Doug Ducey initially offered a $10 million-a-year grant program, which legislators quickly rebuffed.

The governor eventually changed his mind and by the middle of February he had taken the extraordinary step of signing a budget restoration bill outside of the formal budget process.

Flynn, the owner of an electrical company, appreciated the funding restoration. But he also wondered why it was made in the first place.

"It was a fight... and it shouldn't be," he said. "When you're driving down the road, who do you think is going to pave the road? When you're driving an automobile, who's going to fix (it)?"

By CeCe Todd
East Valley Institute of Technology

When the mysterious voice in Field of Dreams whispered, "If you build it, he will come," EVIT instructor Billy DeWitt was listening. Since August, he has been building a Construction Technologies program that is attracting students from across the East Valley and business support from across Arizona.

Under DeWitt's leadership, the East Valley Institute of Technology is now an accredited training facility as recognized by the National Center for Construction Education and Research, which sets the standard for training in the construction industry. Seven instructors, including DeWitt, in EVIT's Construction Technologies, Plumbing, Welding, and HVAC programs at the Main Campus and Welding program at Apache Junction High School are NCCER-certified.

What this means for students: They are being trained to the highest standard in the construction industry and have the opportunity to earn professional NCCER credentials that make them employable anywhere. For Arizona's building trades industry, it means EVIT is a pipeline for well-trained, qualified workers.

DeWitt remembers what it was like watching the bottom fall out of Arizona's construction industry during the recession. Now he's pumped about EVIT working with the industry to rebuild Arizona's building trades.

"To be number one in the business, we have to rely on our trade partners," he said. "They believe in me and in this program."

The list of this year's donations – both monetary and in-kind – to EVIT's Construction Technologies program totals well over $500,000 and continues to grow every day. Some examples include: Okland Construction donating supplies and paying about $100 per student for EVIT's Construction students to obtain their Fall Protection Awareness Cards; the Home Builders Association of Central Arizona providing $10,000 in supplies; and Sundt Construction donating $5,000 plus $1,800 worth of safety vests, safety glasses and hard hats. Then there's Erickson Framing, which is donating $58,500 worth of lumber and materials so that EVIT students can build a house at the Dr. A. Keith Crandell (Main) Campus in Mesa. The house will be used by all of the building trades programs for training.

Currently, there are 324 high school students and adults enrolled in EVIT's building trades programs.

"If there was no EVIT, I would still be trying to figure out what I wanted to do, unsure of the career opportunities and unsure of what I want to do with my future," said Christopher Serrano, 17, a senior at Mesa's Red Mountain High School. "With EVIT, you're allowing thousands of students to be successful in their careers and preparing them for college or the workforce."

EVIT offers 40 career training programs at two centralized campuses in Mesa and at Apache Junction High School. EVIT is tuition-free for East Valley high school students. Tuition-based programs for adults are also offered.

EVIT students have a 96 percent high school graduation rate, two out of three go to college, and 87 percent are in jobs, college or the military within one year of their training.

EVIT is currently enrolling for 2016-17. More information: www.evit.com. Follow EVIT on Twitter @evitnews Use hashtag #WeAreEVIT.

One plate, titled “Media ‘Spin’ Influenced the Public and the War,” accuses anti-war protesters of “echoing Hanoi’s propaganda,” and accuses the media of portraying atrocities like the My Lai massacre as routine conduct for American soldiers. It also criticizes Walter Cronkite for fueling anti-war sentiment by falsely describing the Tet offensive as a military defeat for the United States, and argues that famous images of the war, such as the “napalm girl” and the execution of a Viet Cong officer were distorted and taken out of context, noting that the napalm attack was by South Vietnamese, not American, forces.

Other plaques decry “The Legacy of the So-Called Peace Movement,” emphasize the need to honor Vietnam veterans, and explain key incidents in the timeline of the Vietnam War. The plaque dedicated to “key historical and geo-political facts,” for example, pushes back against conspiracy theories that the Tonkin Gulf incident, which led to the introduction of American ground troops in Vietnam, was a hoax.

One plaque declares that the United States “won the war in 1973,” when American forces pulled out of South Vietnam under a peace agreement with Hanoi, an assertion likely to be widely disputed. Two years after the withdrawal of American combat forces, North Vietnam completed its takeover of the south with the capture of Saigon, uniting the two countries under communist rule.

Abodeely rejects the notion that the information on the plaques is based on opinion. Some of the statements are opinionated, he said, but the data is all fact-based.

Many monuments to the Americans who fought in Vietnam dwell on those who died, such as the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. It lists the names of the war’s dead on its iconic walls, which are mimicked in Arizona’s memorial. Abodeely said Arizona’s monument, which he had a hand in creating, follows the same theme of focusing primarily on the dead and the wounded, which he said was “the theme at the time,” but perpetuates negative images of the Vietnam War.

“If you really want to honor Vietnam veterans, recognize their extraordinary service, why they went there, the merit of their being there, and how their efforts, for political reasons, were maligned,” he said.

The Arizona Military Museum, which Abodeely runs, has already paid $10,050 to have the plaques created. Abodeely said he was joined in his efforts by a number of people, including former legislator Jim Hartdegen, who helped bring the current memorial into existence in 1984; Joey Strickland, the former director of the Arizona Department of Veterans Services; and Oscar Urrea, president of the In-Country Vietnam Veterans Association.

Abodeely’s plaques seem certain to ignite controversy. And a commission tasked with vetting the historical accuracy of the monuments at Bolin Plaza has already expressed skepticism.

In order to alter a monument at Bolin Plaza, the Legislative Government Mall Commission must give its approval, according to the Arizona Department of Administration. The Arizona Historical Advisory Commission must first provide a recommendation certifying that the wording on the monument is historically accurate.

After vetting the text of the plaques, the Arizona Historical Advisory Commission determined that the chronology of the events described therein is correct, but found other problems. In a Feb. 12 letter to the Legislative Governmental Mall Commission, AHAC Chair Teresita Majewski’s primary criticism is that the plaques are not “politically neutral.” She said the commission found the chronology confusing, and said the plaques do not meet Abodeely’s stated goal of honoring and explaining the “extraordinary service” of Vietnam veterans.

“The reviewers noted that when a plaque is erected on state property, there is an expectation that the text will present the facts in a neutral manner,” Majewski wrote to Kevin DeMenna, who chairs the Legislative Governmental Mall Commission. “The majority of the text does not discuss the ‘extraordinary service’ of the military in Vietnam, nor is the text written in a politically neutral manner.”

Nonetheless, Abodeely is likely to at least get a hearing at the Mall Commission. And the commission may well give its seal of approval to the addition to the Vietnam memorial monument.

DeMenna said the commission will take up the issue at its next meeting in several weeks. He acknowledged that the “color commentary” adds a new wrinkle to a process in which the sole determining factor is usually whether the proposed text of the monument is factually correct. But he said his inclination is to support the proposed additions to the monument.

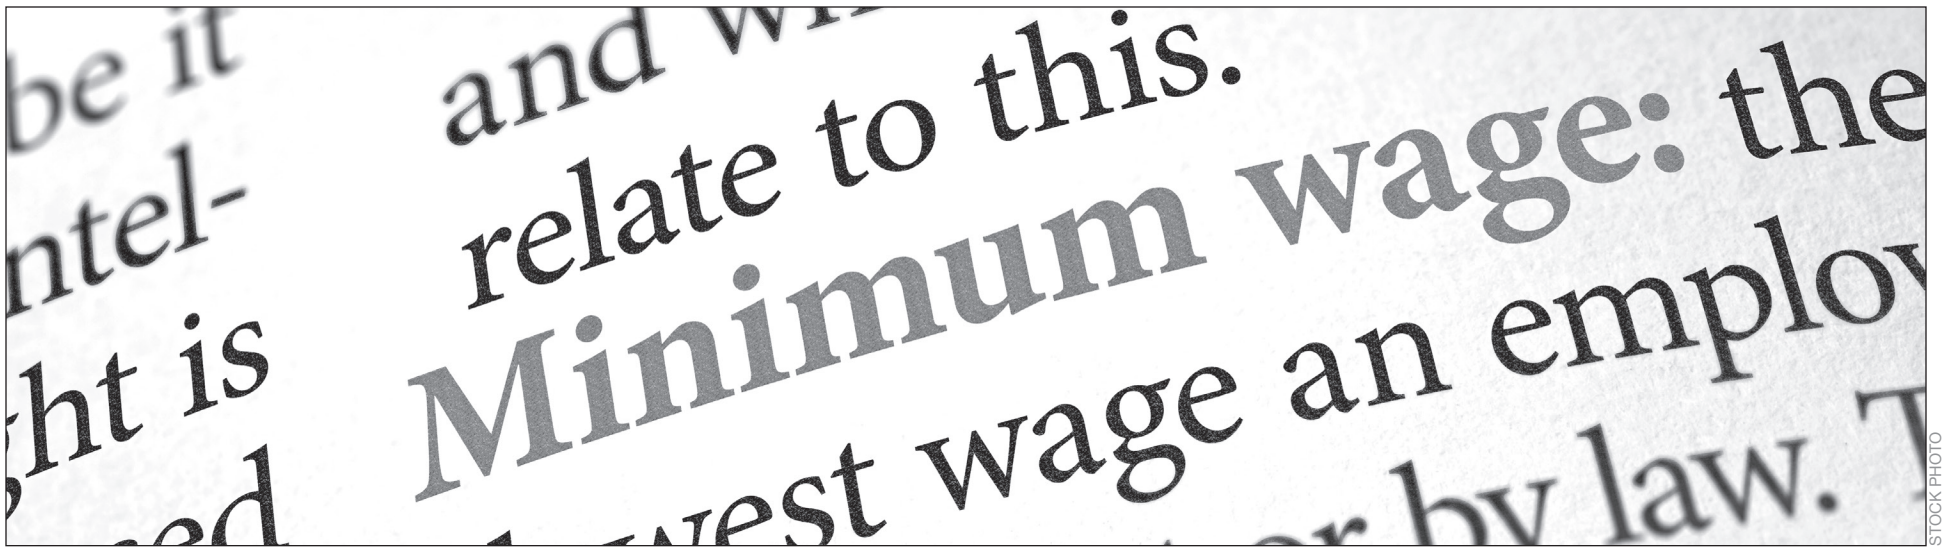

“It’s their monument,” DeMenna said of Vietnam veterans. “I’m predisposed to moving this forward and I’ve not encountered any opposition.”

“It’s owned by the state, but it’s there to honor the people that want this change,” he said.

Abodeely is dismissive of the criticism that the plaques’ text is not politically neutral.

“All wars are political. You cannot talk about a war without it being political,” he said. “And Vietnam was no different.”

Arizona voters may get say on higher minimum wage in November

JEREMY DUDA

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

The nationwide “Fight for 15” movement, which seeks to dramatically increase the minimum wage, may be coming to Arizona this November.

Living United for Change in Arizona, a progressive advocacy group that focuses heavily on immigration issues, is leading a coalition that is considering an initiative drive that would seek to put a new minimum wage measure on the November ballot. LUCHA has been a strident advocate of the “Fight for 15” movement that seeks to raise the minimum wage for fast food workers.

Tomas Robles, LUCHA’s executive director, said the group is committed to a minimum wage ballot measure, but hasn’t decided yet if 2016 is the right year to do it. The coalition may push it back to 2018, he said. Conventional wisdom usually holds that liberal ballot measures fare better in presidential election years, though Robles said that may not hold true in Arizona’s case.

Either way, he said, the group will make a decision by the first week of March.

“Timing is always a big question, and also just seeing and understanding what the landscape in Arizona would look like,”

Robles said.

Another open question is whether the group will indeed fight for $15. Robles said some details of the proposal have yet to be finalized, including whether the proposed minimum wage will be set at $15 or something lower. Wherever that new minimum wage is set, Robles said it will have an escalator that will gradually phase in over the course of four or five years.

“There’s no set number just yet in terms of what the minimum wage will look like,” he said. “We’ve done polling on various amounts and all of them poll really well. But it’s just figuring exactly where we want to go from there.”

A 2006 ballot measure increased Arizona’s minimum wage to $6.75 an hour, with that figure rising annually based on increases in the cost of living. Arizona’s minimum wage is currently set at $8.05 an hour, higher than the federal minimum wage of $7.25.

Robles said the minimum wage coalition includes the American Federation of State, County and Local Employees, along with other labor and community organizations that haven’t publicly declared their support yet.

There are also unnamed national groups that have committed to help fund the potential initiative, said political consultant Bill Scheel, whose firm, Javelina, is working with LUCHA on the project.

“There’s a huge amount of national interest in this issue. And so you’ve got a lot of groups that supported these types of efforts in other states that have pledged significant support to a possible initiative. And we want to make sure that support is here in the state, and so far it looks like it is,” Scheel said.

If the coalition moves forward on the minimum wage project, it’s going to need all the funding it can get. The proposed initiative would need 150,642 valid signatures of registered voters to get on the ballot, which means it will likely need more than 200,000 signatures to ensure that it has enough of a cushion to overcome ineligible signatures.

That will cost plenty, especially this late in the year. Signatures for ballot initiatives are due by July 7.

Arizona is one of several states where advocates are eying ballot measures to increase the minimum wage. In January, supporters of an initiative to increase California’s minimum wage to $15 submitted more than 600,000 signatures to put the question on the ballot. A similar effort is underway in Oregon.

And there is likely to be well-funded opposition to any ballot proposition that seeks to increase the minimum wage. The Arizona Chamber of Commerce and Industry and other business community organizations are fiercely opposed to an increase, as is Gov. Doug Ducey, who has threatened to withhold state revenues from cities that pass municipal minimum wage laws.

The Chamber of Commerce opposed the 2006 initiative that increased the minimum, and is likely to do the same if a new proposal reaches the ballot, chamber spokesman Garrick Taylor said.

“The chamber has serious concerns over policies that would make employment more expensive. And we believe that a dramatic minimum wage hike would hurt the very employees that its advocates claim to want to help,” Taylor said.

Scheel was optimistic that the initiative can prevail over whatever opposition the business community, the governor or others throw its way.

“That opposition was there 10 years ago when the first minimum wage ... increase was proposed, and that passed by well over a two to one margin. So I think history is on our side,” Scheel said. ☐

House approves experimental flat income tax, could cost state $39M

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

So here’s a simple way to figure your taxes: List what you make, deduct $10,000 and pay 1 percent of that to the state.

That’s the plan that the state House adopted on Feb. 24, at least for those at the bottom of the income scale. It would allow single Arizonans who earn less than $25,000 a year to choose an optional flat tax instead of having to go through all the computations.

But Rep. David Stevens, R-Sierra Vista, said he sees his legislation as just a starting point.

Stevens said SB2018 is set up as a five-year pilot project to see how it works, who takes advantage of it, and how much the state might lose in revenues. He said there’s no reason the same system would not work for everyone.

Under current law, tax rates range from 2.59 percent for individuals with an adjusted gross income of up to $10,000 – double that for married couples filing jointly – to 4.54 percent for individual income of more than $150,000. But taxpayers are permitted to either itemize deductions or take a standard deduction based on their income.

Those who opt for the 1 percent levy would get only a standard $10,000 deduction.

Stevens said this is a good place to start. He said those at the bottom of the pay scale generally have no deductions anyway.

This permits them to look at their individual circumstances.

“If you get more of your tax money back with that form, you’ll use that form,” Stevens said.

“Being optional is the key,” he said. “If you don’t want to use it, don’t use it.”

Figuring out how much using the flat tax option would cost would be a snap.

Arizona is a “piggy-back” state: Each taxpayer’s state income is computed off of line 37 of the federal Form 1040, the federal adjusted gross income.

Under current law, that leads to all the additional computations and deductions.

But using what Stevens envisions, anyone whose income is $10,000 a year or less would owe nothing, though that person would still need to file a return.

Above that? Take earnings, subtract $10,000 and pay 1 percent. So the tax owed by someone at the top of what the law allows would be $150.

Stevens acknowledged that, pretty much by definition, taxpayers will choose the method that costs them less.

He said legislative budget staffers have put the potential loss to the state at $39 million.

That’s based on an estimate that 660,000 people would be eligible to use the optional flat tax and that 312,000 would actually opt for that alternative. But Stevens said he’s not concerned about the price tag.

“The beauty is, that’s money back in their pockets,” he said. “That’s the goal, to have people keep more of what they earned and not to have the state take it.”

Stevens may have something going for him politically that could help his measure become law.

Gov. Doug Ducey promised during his 2014 campaign to propose reducing taxes every year “with the goal of pushing income tax rates as close to zero as possible.” What Stevens is proposing could be a way for Ducey to meet that promise. ☐

House establishes

MANDATORY TRAINING

During the first week of February, House staffers had to attend mandatory training sessions explaining the new policies. The new policy dictates that the House staff will not be reimbursed for any official business travel until they have completed the training.

Lawmakers, on the other hand, are not required to attend any training, nor are they banned from receiving reimbursements until a training session is completed.

The fact that all House staffers had to attend the training galled House Democratic Leader Eric Meyer, who noted that the travel spending problems lie not with Democratic lawmakers or staff, but with a handful of top Republican leaders and their staff.

Meyer, D-Paradise Valley, said the problems go beyond state fleet vehicle use.

“Frankly, there’s more than cars that have been used for travel. There has been air travel and going to conferences, too,” he said.

Meyer said it’s good that the House now has a clear travel policy, but he still has doubts about whether it will be followed and if anyone will be held accountable for past abuses.

“The question is what is going to be done around what’s already happened (with publicly funded travel for lawmakers and staff), because there’s possible violations of use of state property for campaigning and for personal use,” he said.

Meyer said he asked House Chief of Staff Tami Stowe for details on the chamber’s budget almost a year ago after he received a new television set in his office that he neither asked for nor needed. But the House refused to show Meyer where the chamber’s $13 million annual appropriation has been spent.

“They basically told us that’s not going to happen... It just shows how much power (House GOP leadership has) around here,” he said.

REQUESTS REMAIN UNMET

Similarly, the House has not provided documentation on its travel expenditures in response to a public records request from the Arizona Capitol Times.

A request filed Jan. 19 seeks information on the chamber’s travel spending, including a summary of the trips taken, who took them and what was spent on transportation, lodging and meals. The chamber initially said it would have summary data complete in early February, but now says it has no estimate for when the records will be turned over.

The Senate fulfilled an identical request within three days. um

House gives preliminary OK to ‘Small Business Job Creation Act’

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

The state House is asking Arizona voters to lower property taxes – but not for themselves.

In fact, HCR2031, given preliminary approval on Feb. 24, actually could mean higher taxes for homeowners.

The measure relates to the fact that the Arizona Constitution requires all property owners to pay an annual levy based on the value of their land and buildings. But businesses also must pay what’s called a tax on their “personal property,” everything from desks and computers to printing presses and other manufacturing equipment.

That value is based on the purchase price of the equipment.

It does decrease, every year, along with the applicable tax. But the levy never goes away, under the presumption that any equipment being used has some residual value.

A previously approved ballot measure exempted the first $50,000 of value, a figure that has grown with inflation to about $160,000.

HCR2031, if approved in November, would immediately boost that exemption to $2.4 million. Potentially more significant, it would let lawmakers increase the exemption even more in the future without asking for future voter approval.

Rep. J.D. Mesnard, R-Chandler, said the change would be good for the economy.

“If you want folks to be investing and buying and whatnot, we should increase the exemption,” said Mesnard, who dubbed his legislation the “Small Business Job Creation Act.”

More than money is at stake. Companies whose property is worth less than the exemption do not have to bother computing what their equipment is worth, factoring in depreciation, much less write a check every year.

The change would mean little to the state, which does not depend on property taxes. But it could make a difference at the local level.

Generally speaking, cities, counties and school districts figure out how much money they need and set a property tax rate that will bring in that amount, based on the district’s total net assessed valuation.

So if some property is taken off the tax rolls, that lowers the district’s net assessed valuation. And that would mean the overall tax rate, for everyone, has to go up to raise the same amount of cash.

Mesnard has crafted the measure in a way to blunt opposition.

The new, higher exemption would apply only to equipment purchased starting next year. That means the current $160,000 exemption would still apply to equipment businesses already own.

But even with that, there would be at least some tax shift, largely to homeowners.

When a similar measure was on the 2012 ballot, legislative budget staffers figured that the difference on a home in Mesa with a primary assessed value of $114,000 would be just $3.25.

Farrell Quinlan, state director of the National Federation of Independent Business, conceded at the time that the added burden for homeowners would grow with time. Companies would replace old equipment with new equipment that does not wind up on the tax rolls, he said. But he argued approval of the measure ultimately will create more revenues overall.

That 2012 effort was defeated, gathering just 44 percent of the vote. But Mesnard said he thinks the result would be different this time around.

A final roll-call vote is needed to send the measure to the Senate. If it is approved there it would go to voters in November, as the governor does not get a say on ballot measures. um

Independents still seek voice in Arizona presidential primary

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

A group of political independents is making a last-ditch effort to give them a voice in Arizona’s presidential preference primary.

Cathy Stewart, national vice president of Independentvoting.org, said on Feb. 22 that state lawmakers are half right in objecting to the fact that all Arizonans pay for the quadrennial event even though more than a third of those registered to vote cannot participate.

The state House voted 37-22 earlier this month to wipe out the primary after this year’s March 22 event. That will leave it up to each party to decide how it wants to choose delegates to the national convention.

And that could be anything from party caucuses to privately run primaries and even, if the parties want, letting party leaders make that decision.

But Stewart said there’s a better idea: Keep the primary but let independents participate.

She noted there are more than 1.2 million independents in this state, making up close to 37 percent of all registered voters. By contrast, there are just slightly more than 1.1 million Republicans and fewer than 920,000 Democrats.

So her solution is to keep the primary – and the state funding – and just open the doors to everyone.

“We don’t think it’s right for private organizations to use taxpayer dollars to fund an election that excludes 50 percent of young people who are registered,” Stewart said.

That’s the same argument being made by Secretary of State Michele Reagan. But she supports HB2567 to wipe out the state-run primary entirely rather than open it up.

There is an alternative for independents – or, at least, there was one: Reregister with one of the major parties. The deadline for doing that for the March 22 event, however, was Feb. 22.

Stewart, however, said that’s not an answer.

“That’s the exact point independents are making,” she said.

“They don’t want to join a political party in order to be able to exercise their fundamental democratic right to vote,” Stewart continued. “Independents view that as a form of coercion.”

That, however, goes to the question of political association. The issue of taxpayer funding aside, should independents be able to affect who becomes the standard-bearer for each party?

But Tim Castro, state campaign director of Independent Voters for Arizona, said independents are not asking to make the decision for the parties of who will be their candidates, even if they do outnumber party faithful.

“We’re asking for access to the voting box,” he said. And Castro said being able to weigh in at the general election in November is not sufficient.

The problem that proponents of an open presidential primary are facing is that if the legislation becomes law, the state-run presidential primary goes away along with any state oversight of the process. And that leaves nothing in statutes to amend to open up the process to independents.

But Stewart insisted that does not end their efforts.

“We’re not going to stop our call for the Democratic and Republican parties, who actually have the ultimate authority to do this, to open their presidential primary process to 1.2 million voters in the state,” she said.

Matt Roberts, spokesman for Reagan, said his boss would support opening up the presidential preference election to independents – but only if the Republicans and Democrats were to ask. And to date, they have not.

There is precedent in Arizona for giving independents a role in selecting partisan candidates.

Prior to 1998, the primary elections for federal, state and local offices were like the presidential preference: limited to those registered with that party. That year voters agreed to allow independents to participate to a limited degree, permitting them to choose the ballot of either major party. um

Senate approves bill that strips Douglas of key powers

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Without any debate, the Senate voted on Feb. 23 to pass a bill altering the power between the State Board of Education and Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Douglas.

The 24-5 vote sends SB1416 to the House for consideration. Five Republicans voted against it.

The bill puts the board in control of hiring, firing and supervising its own workers and puts certain administrative functions under the control of the board.

The bill's passage in the House and governor's signature on it would potentially end pending lawsuits the board and Douglas have filed against each other in their year-long power struggle.

Douglas pleaded with lawmakers in letters on Feb. 9 and the day of the vote not to pass the bill and let the courts decide.

"The department respects the vital role and constitutional authority of our Legislature to set and alter our state's laws and direct the setting of policy," Douglas said in her letter. "However, this bill does not provide any needed clarification; rather, it further complicates the relationship between the board and the department."

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Jeff Dial, a Chandler Republican, said in a press release the bill isn't meant to strip away power from anyone, but to correct inconsistencies that have grown over the years.

He said it builds upon a bill that passed the Senate and died in the House last year meant to distinguish the powers and duties between the two.

Douglas, who is a member of the board by statute, said neither she nor the Department of Education, which she runs, had any input on writing the bill.

Douglas said in both letters she has offered the board an olive branch in the form of court mediation, only to have

Superintendent of Public Instruction Diane Douglas appears before the Senate Education Committee in Phoenix on Feb. 4. Douglas tried to persuade the committee not to advance a bill she contends gives some of her powers to the Board of Education. The committee passed the bill on a 5-2 vote.

"... this bill does not provide any needed clarification; rather, it further complicates the relationship between the board and the department."

— Diane Douglas, state superintendent of public instruction the board slap it away.

Board President Greg Miller said that isn't true. He said Douglas has spurned up to seven offers to mediate and she has said on several occasions in board discussions that she isn't willing to work out a solution.

"So to suggest that now she was the one 'willing' to mediate, when pending legislation could or will solve the issue, (that) she is trying to paint the board as unwilling to mediate seems to be disingenuous," Miller said.

Mary O'Grady, the board's attorney, said it is always willing to mediate.

"We simply believe that the mediation process for the litigation should be separate from the legislative process that is already underway," O'Grady said.

The problems began in February 2015 when Douglas fired the two administrators who work for the board.

Douglas asserts that the law clearly states the board hires its employees at the superintendent's recommendation and they work under supervision of the superintendent.

Gov. Doug Ducey interceded and directed state human services officials to ignore the terminations.

Douglas sued and asked Maricopa County Superior Court Judge Patricia Starr to declare her interpretation of the law is correct, but Starr ruled she had no jurisdiction in the dispute.

The board's staff moved out of its offices in the Department of Education building, 1535 W. Jefferson St., in May and into the Executive Tower a few blocks away at 1700 W. Washington St.

Douglas refused remote access to teacher files for investigators who work for the board. Their job is look into teacher misconduct. Without the remote access the investigators have to go to their old offices to look at the files.

The board sued to force Douglas to provide the access, and a decision by Judge Arthur Anderson of Maricopa County Superior Court is pending. ☐

Bills to weaken the State Bar draw extended debate

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

The House put in extra time and debate on a couple of seemingly inconspicuous bills aimed at weakening the State Bar of Arizona.

The first of the bills, HB2219, failed 29-30 on Feb. 24, but not before nearly 40 minutes of floor debate the previous day that left supporters of the bill confused and exasperated.

The bill turns over attorney licensing to the Arizona Supreme Court.

Rep. Eddie Farnsworth, R-Gilbert, a non-practicing attorney who is still required to pay dues to the bar, said the bill simply puts attorney licensure and discipline with the high court, where he says it belongs.

He said he's baffled at the opposition because no other profession is forced to join an organization to practice.

"I really have no idea what the opposition is to this bill," he said.

Rep. Randall Friese, D-Tucson, said he thinks the Legislature is overstepping its bounds.

"I'm afraid this bill specifically directs the Supreme Court to do certain things," Friese said. "And I'm still concerned this body cannot."

Rep. Sonny Borrelli, R-Lake Havasu City, said the current system of requiring attorneys to join the State Bar to practice law is "fundamentally wrong" and in essence is forcing people to pay to work.

"It's a shakedown," Borelli said.

The House spent nearly an hour Feb. 24 debating HB2221, which allows the Supreme Court to collect mandatory fees from attorneys and spend the money on the regulation of attorneys. The court may also collect voluntary dues for all other uses.

The House had yet to give the bill a final vote by late on Feb. 25.

The sponsor of both bills, Rep. Anthony Kern, R-Glendale, said HB2221 is promoting the First Amendment because, too often, the bar takes political positions that dues-paying members don't agree with.

Friese argued that the bill is more of an assault on the First Amendment than the status quo, because members are currently protected by U.S. Supreme Court precedent limiting the political speech of mandatory bar associations.

The bar can lobby on bills that affect its core functions or pertain to the administration of justice. Otherwise it has to refund each member a proportional sum of the total spent on lobbying the issue. Under the bill, members are still forced to join the bar, but it can now freely take a political position on any issue it wants, Friese said.

Debbie McCune-Davis, D-Phoenix said the bill also oversteps the Legislature's authority.

"Why are you trying to regulate the Supreme Court?" she said.

Kern said he's just trying to put the dues where they belong. ☐

House committee votes to relieve Tobin of solar conflict

RACHEL LEINGANG

rachel.leingang@azcapitoltimes.com

An Arizona House panel advanced a bill designed to relieve Corporation Commissioner Andy Tobin of a conflict of interest.

A strike-everything amendment to HB2123 from Rep. John Allen, R-Scottsdale, would make clear that conflict-of-interest laws related to the Legislature would also apply to the Corporation Commission.

Tobin, who was appointed to a seat on the Arizona Corporation Commission by Gov. Doug Ducey, has a son-in-law who works as an inventory specialist at SolarCity. The commission's attorneys found the involvement to be a conflict of interest, requiring Tobin to recuse himself from proceedings involving SolarCity.

The striker would make it so Tobin can vote on issues related to SolarCity. Numerous utility cases at the commission are seeking changes to solar energy.

The House Appropriations Committee voted 8-4 in favor of the striker. Reps. Rick Gray and Mark Cardenas abstained from voting. Gray, who is running for the Corporation Commission, said he wanted to be "squeaky clean," so he decided not to vote.

The striker to HB2123 says, "Notwithstanding any other law, commissioners and employees of the commission are subject to Title 38, Chapter 3, Article 8." That statute defines conflicts of interest for "all public officers and employees of incorporated cities or towns, of political subdivisions and of the state and any of its departments, commissions, agencies, bodies or boards."

An amendment to Allen's strike-everything amendment adds to conflict-of-interest statutes that a relative of an officer-holder who works at a business that has 25 or more employees and doesn't "assert control or decision-making authority" wouldn't be a conflict.

Tobin said the Corporation Commission attorneys think he should recuse himself from multiple upcoming proceedings related to solar, one of the most contentious issues at the commission.

"I disagree with our lawyers. Our chief counsel told me that I wasn't even electable or appointable when I first got here (to the commission). ... I'm skeptical about the bureaucracy of this institution," Tobin said in an interview.

In the committee on Feb. 24, Allen said the bill clarifies that the conflict is too remote to disqualify Tobin from voting on solar matters.

"This is like saying that if I have a relative who drives a UPS truck, I would not be able to have a bill that does anything to UPS," Allen said.

Tobin said he wants to be able to vote on upcoming cases and clarify the issue for future commissioners as well.

"But if you believe that somebody who's taken an entry-level position ... will impact and conflict your vote, then you have to vote against this amendment. ... There's great risk going forward to have some lawyers say it's a conflict and some say it's not," Tobin told the committee.

The commission's ethics attorney, Christopher Kempley, told Tobin in a letter that the provisions in HB2123 would successfully address the issue and allow him to vote.

But attorney Tom Ryan, who filed the initial conflict-of-interest complaint that got former commissioner Susan Bitter Smith ousted, said the commission is supposed to be held to a higher standard. The commission has its own conflict-of-interest statutes because they regulate monopoly utilities, and those statutes should remain intact, Ryan said.

"You're not clarifying things, you're muddling things," Ryan said.

Rep. Charlene Fernandez, D-Yuma, said she was embarrassed the Legislature was discussing an issue narrowly tailored to one elected official instead of focusing on larger problems like education funding. She voted against the bill.

"I don't think that solar is so remote from what our Corporation Commission does on a daily basis. ... I think the perception (of a conflict) is there. It just doesn't look very ethical," Fernandez said.

Perhaps the commission's attorneys have been much more cautious since Bitter Smith resigned over a potential conflict of interest for her outside work, Tobin told the Arizona Capitol Times. But, he added, he's "been more scoped out" than most other people over the past few years with his congressional campaign and his role as speaker.

"At the end of the day, I came here to vote on everything, so I'm going to fight. ... I want to fight to be able to vote. While there's a disagreement amongst attorneys, and there'd probably be a disagreement in a court of law, it seems to me like if the Legislature agrees with me, maybe they can help clean some of this stuff up and that may solve some of the problem," Tobin said.

Tobin said he hasn't decided yet if he'll run for the Corporation Commission when his term as appointed commissioner ends this year.

Over the coming months, Tobin will be going on road trips throughout the state to talk with rural folks about the commission, hoping to connect the statewide office with the rest of the state outside the Valley. He's headed to Yuma this month, then will go to Mohave, Navajo and Apache counties after that. He said he thinks his trips will help him figure out if he should run in the 2016 commission election.

"I haven't landed, I'm like right in the middle. If I feel I can help, maybe I can get in. If I don't feel I can help, I don't want to get in," Tobin said. ☐

Chabin, Mundell announce run for Corporation Commission

RACHEL LEINGANG

Democrats Tom Chabin and Bill Mundell kicked off their bids for seats on the Arizona Corporation Commission on Feb. 25.

Mundell, a Chandler attorney and former state representative, served on the commission from 1999 to 2008 as a Republican. He recently switched parties.

Chabin is a Tucson Democrat who served in the state Legislature from 2007 to 2012, representing Flagstaff and parts of Coconino County.

Chabin and Mundell, who are Clean Elections candidates, said at a press conference that they expect to see a lot of opposition from Arizona Public Service.

More than $3 million flooded the 2014 Corporation Commission elections to support Commissioners Doug Little and Tom Forese from outside dark money groups Save Our Future Now and the Free Enterprise Club, which don't have to disclose their donors. Many speculate that the money came in part from APS, though the utility has not confirmed or denied its involvement.

Mundell and Chabin said, though they're running as Democrats, they'll be reaching out to all voters, regardless of party affiliation, to tout their "conflict-free" message.

"The commission itself is creating headlines every single day about conflicts of interest, resignations. ... I think we'll get a lot of Republican votes," Chabin said. "I think (the commission election is) going to get a lot of attention. I think there'll be an awareness that maybe there hasn't been in the past," Chabin said.

Three seats will be open in the 2016 commission election: Commissioner Andy Tobin, who was recently appointed to fill out the remainder of former Commissioner Susan Bitter Smith's term; Commissioner Bob Stump, who is termed out and cannot run for re-election; and Bob Burns, who is running for re-election. ☐

House votes to forbid enforcement of some federal gun laws

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

The state House voted 33-21 on Feb. 24 to forbid state and local governments from helping to enforce any federal law, act, order or rule that deals with the personal possession of firearms and infringes on the constitutional right of people to have weapons.

Rep. Anthony Kern, R-Glendale, said HB2300 spells out what he says is already the right of state and local governments to refuse to help the federal government implement its laws. But the legislation goes beyond that, cutting off state funds from any local government that does agree to cooperate.

The measure also subjects any employee who knowingly violates the law to a $3,000 fine for a first offense and up to six months in jail for subsequent violations.

Proponents see the measure as a way of countering any moves by the Obama administration to impose regulations on the transfer of firearms. That would include closing what some see as a loophole in laws that say those who buy weapons at gun shows are not subject to the requirements for a background check.

The vote came over the objections of Rep. Randall Friesse, D-Tucson. He said a 2015 online poll shows that close to two-thirds of Arizonans want stiffer gun regulations to keep weapons out of the hands of those who should not have them. ☐

Senate approves legislation banning research on fetuses

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

Calling the claim that fetal research helps cure diseases a lie, state senators voted Feb. 24 to outlaw scientific research on aborted fetuses.

SB1474 would bring to a halt virtually all work done on tissue from fetuses that were the result of elective abortions. The only thing doctors and laboratories could do is test the tissue to diagnose the life or health of the mother or the fetus, or conduct pathological studies to find out if the fetus was diseased.

The measure, approved by an 18-11 margin, also would make it a crime not only to sell fetal tissue, something already illegal under federal law, but even to give it away or transfer it. Sen. Nancy Barto, R-Phoenix, added last-minute language to ensure that state health officials could find out what happened to the tissue even if it infringes on physician-patient relations.

Separately, the Senate voted by the same margin to permanently disqualify any organization that offers elective abortions from being part of the State Employees Charitable Campaign, which allows state workers to have donations to groups deducted automatically from their paychecks.

"I believe that abortion kills unborn human beings," said Sen. John Kavanagh,

“Legal fetal tissue research has profound potential to advance human health and prevent immeasurable suffering. Fetal tissue research saves lives. There is no substitute for fetal tissue research.”

— Senate Minority Leader Katie Hobbs, D-Phoenix

R-Fountain Hills in support of SB1485. And he said while these are employee donations, the system is administered with tax dollars.

Much of what is driving the debate on SB1474 is the question of the relative merits of the research.

Planned Parenthood Arizona said it does not provide fetal tissue, though other affiliates nationally do. Donations generally come after a woman has given her consent. And clinics are allowed to charge for their costs.

But, Senate Minority Leader Katie Hobbs, D-Phoenix, said, "Legal fetal tissue research has profound potential to advance human health and prevent immeasurable suffering. Fetal tissue research saves lives. There is no substitute for fetal tissue research."

Sen. Debbie Lesko, R-Peoria, disputed

those claims.

"The truth is, is that no one with Parkinson's or Alzheimer's (diseases) has been cured from using aborted fetal tissue research" she said.

"Yet this is the kind of misleading information that Planned Parenthood has been giving women to convince them to sign off on having their aborted babies' body parts trafficked in the name of research," Lesko continued. She called fetal research "outdated science."

Barto went a step farther, citing what she said was a published report of a 2001 study funded by the National Institutes of Health on the use of fetal tissue to help patients with Parkinson's disease.

"The doctors called the results absolutely devastating, tragic, catastrophic, and labeled the results a real nightmare," she said. By contrast, Barto said there are promising results using adult stem cells which do not depend on aborted fetuses.

"This bill seeks to protect the dignity of aborted pre-born children in all respects," Barto said. "Whether by profit or donation, the trafficking in fetal body parts undermines the preciousness of life."

The vote also reignited the debate over undercover videos released last year that purport to show Planned Parenthood officials – though none from Arizona – discussing the harvesting and sale of fetal tissues.

Hobbs said those videos had been "discredited" as being highly edited. And she said separate investigations showed Planned Parenthood had broken no laws.

"There was no evidence of tampering," countered Sen. Steve Smith, R-Maricopa, but simply that the videos were "scaled down." HNS

Court of Appeals upholds Horne campaign finance ruling, $400K fine

JEREMY DUDA
jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

The Arizona Court of Appeals rebuffed former Attorney General Tom Horne's latest attempt to clear himself of the allegations that partially led to his defeat in his re-election campaign, affirming a lower court ruling that upheld a $400,000 fine for campaign finance violations related to his 2010 campaign.

Writing for the court in a unanimous decision, Judge Jon Thompson said Yavapai County Attorney Sheila Polk acted properly in determining that Horne illegally coordinated with an independent expenditure committee run by ally Kathleen Winn during the waning days of his 2010 campaign against Democrat Felecia Rotellini. In doing so, the court rejected Horne's argument that Polk's decision wasn't supported by evidence in the case.

The allegations stem from an ad run by Business Leaders for Arizona, a pro-Horne independent expenditure that Winn ran attacking Rotellini.

The Yavapai County Attorney's Office said a series of phone calls between Horne and Winn, which coincided with emails that Winn sent her political consultant, were sufficient for Polk to conclude that the two were coordinating about the anti-Rotelini commercial. Horne and Winn claimed that the calls were about a real estate transaction, not the campaign ad.

“The evidence supports Polk's conclusion that Horne and Winn coordinated on October 20, 2010. Although the record may also support a different conclusion, we must defer to Polk's decision.”

— Judge Jon Thompson

The court made a similar finding regarding a later email from Horne to Winn, in which Horne cited polling data that he suggested Winn use to raise more money for attack ads against Rotellini. Winn forwarded the email to her consultant, Brian Murray, who forwarded it to his attorney, saying he'd repeatedly warned Winn to break off contact with Horne.

Under state law, the court must affirm Polk's decision unless it was "not supported by substantial evidence, is contrary to law, is arbitrary and capricious or is an abuse of discretion." Thompson said Polk's decision did not meet any of those criteria.

"The evidence supports Polk's conclusion that Horne and Winn coordinated on October 20, 2010," Thompson wrote, referring to the phone calls between Horne and Winn during the production of the ad. "Although the record may also support a different conclusion, we must defer to Polk's decision."

Horne said he will appeal the ruling to the Arizona Supreme Court. He also emphasized that an administrative law judge ruled in his favor in the case in 2014.

"It's important to remember that the only objective judge who heard evidence in this case found in favor of the defendant," Horne said, referencing Administrative Law Judge Tammy Eigenheer's ruling, which Polk rejected.

The appellate court also rejected other arguments made by Horne and Winn's attorneys during their December hearing.

Attorneys Dennis Wilenchik and Timothy La Sota argued that Polk's dual role as both advocate and judge in the case violated their right to due process. But the court said such a combination of roles doesn't violate the right to due process unless actual bias against the defendants can be demonstrated, a threshold that it said Horne and Winn's attorneys failed to meet.

Wilenchik and La Sota also sought to overturn the ruling against Horne and Winn by arguing that some of the campaign finance laws they were accused of violating were unconstitutional. The attorneys revived a longstanding conservative argument that Arizona's campaign contribution limits prior to 2013, when the Legislature dramatically increased them, were unconstitutionally low.

But the Court of Appeals said Arizona's 2010 limits, which capped individual contributions to statewide candidates at $840, did not meet the criteria of a 2006 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that scrapped Vermont's stringent contribution limits.

"Given all the factors and a lack of showing that a candidate for attorney general in Arizona could not run a competitive campaign under the 2010 contribution limits, we find that the contribution limits did not violate the First Amendment," Thompson wrote.

Furthermore, the court rejected an argument that the fine against Horne and Winn should be nixed because the state's statutory definition of "political committee" that was in use during the 2010 campaign was later found unconstitutional by the federal judge. Thompson wrote that the court declined to consider that argument because Horne and Winn failed to raise it at the trial court level. HNS

Bill reduces penalty for texting while driving

JUNEAU — The Senate Judiciary Committee examined legislation Feb. 22 aimed at boosting enforcement of Alaska's ban on texting while driving.

It would reduce the penalty for driving while texting without causing an injury from a misdemeanor to a violation, making it possible for officers to issue citations to distracted drivers. Stiffer penalties would remain in cases involving injury or death.

Lt. David Hanson, a spokesman with the Alaska Bureau of Highway Patrol, has testified that troopers are less likely to charge someone under current law requiring proof that a driver is distracted by a screen device. Hanson said it can be difficult for a trooper to document a driver using a mobile device. Under the current law, roughly one person per month was charged with violating the law from 2012 to 2015, he said.

Lawmakers questioned the search and seizure implications of traffic stops during which drivers are accused of texting or operating a mobile device illegally.

EPA employees say building making them sick

SAN FRANCISCO — Employees at the Environmental Protection Agency's San Francisco office claim their office is making them sick.

KNTV-TV reports that employees at the EPA Region 9 Headquarters say the air quality in their office is so poor they're unable to do their jobs. Testing conducted by Berkeley Analytical found high levels of formaldehyde and caprolactam, which the EPA classifies as potentially dangerous. The EPA hired the environmental testing lab to check the office.

EPA officials say they do not believe they are out of compliance with state laws because the elevated levels were not sustained over eight hours, but the agency did not test over an eight-hour span of time.

Senate considers outlawing marijuana edibles

CHEYENNE — Wyoming lawmakers are struggling with how to craft legislation regulating marijuana brownies and other foods and beverages containing the drug.

The Wyoming Senate on Feb. 22 voted to advance a bill making possession of more than 3 ounces of marijuana edibles a felony. However, senators continue to argue about how to measure the concentration of marijuana in the substances, and its potency.

The debate was prompted after a state district court judge ruled last year that the law outlawing marijuana refers specifically to pot in plant form and does not cover the extract found in edibles.

The Senate rejected an amendment sponsored by Sen. Cale Case, R-Lander, to allow defendants charged with felony possession of marijuana edibles to argue the substances they possessed held the equivalent of less than 3 ounces of actual marijuana plant material.

the source of a massive spill in August that tainted rivers in three states.

The decisions by the Silverton town trustees and San Juan County commissioners were a key step toward getting millions of dollars in federal funds to remediate the Gold King Mine and 45 to 50 others that have been leaking acid wastewater into rivers for decades.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency inadvertently triggered a 3 million gallon spill from the Gold King on Aug. 5 while doing preliminary cleanup work, stepping up pressure on local and federal officials to act.

The spill polluted the Animas and San Juan rivers in Colorado, New Mexico and Utah with metals including arsenic, cadmium, copper, lead, mercury, nickel and zinc. Last week the chairman of the U.S. House Natural Resources Committee issued subpoenas to the Obama administration seeking documents related to a review of the spill.

Panel backs school broadband legislation

BOISE — A Senate committee is backing legislation that will allow public school districts to obtain their own broadband contracts after abandoning the previous statewide model that was deemed illegal last spring.

The two proposals approved by the Senate Education Committee would help school districts fund their broadband contract. Both bills now move to the Senate floor.

Lawmakers stripped the previous one-size-fits-all model from the Idaho Department of Administration after a district judge ruled a $60 million contract that created the system was illegal. That program, known as the Idaho Education Network, had been providing Idaho districts with high-speed Internet since 2010.

That decision left individual school districts scrambling to negotiate their contracts with broadband providers. The new program will be managed by local districts under the state's Department of Education.

Woman dies in jail of meth poisoning

CLARINDA — Autopsy results have revealed a Council Bluffs woman who was found unresponsive in her jail cell died from meth poisoning, and a further investigation uncovered a recorded phone call in which she told another person she was dying.

The Iowa Department of Public Safety said that 25-year-old Jessica Lee was found unresponsive in the Page County jail cell on Dec. 1. She was transported to an Omaha hospital, where she died the next day.

An autopsy determined the cause of death was acute methamphetamine toxicity. Officials later discovered that just before Lee was found unresponsive she had placed a recorded call to someone saying she was dying. She admitted during the call to sneaking the meth into jail inside a body cavity. Nobody notified officials about her condition.

Senate advances foster care proposal

TOPEKA — A conservative Republican's proposal to have Kansas launch a pilot program to have couples with "stable" marriages who don't smoke or drink alcohol serve as foster parents for abused and neglected children advanced Feb. 22 in the state Senate.

The GOP-dominated chamber gave first-round approval on a voice vote to a bill from Sen. Forrest Knox, of Altoona. Senators expected to take a final vote this week to determine whether the measure passes and goes to the House.

Knox's proposal would create a new category of foster homes known as CARE families, for couples who have been legally married at least seven years.

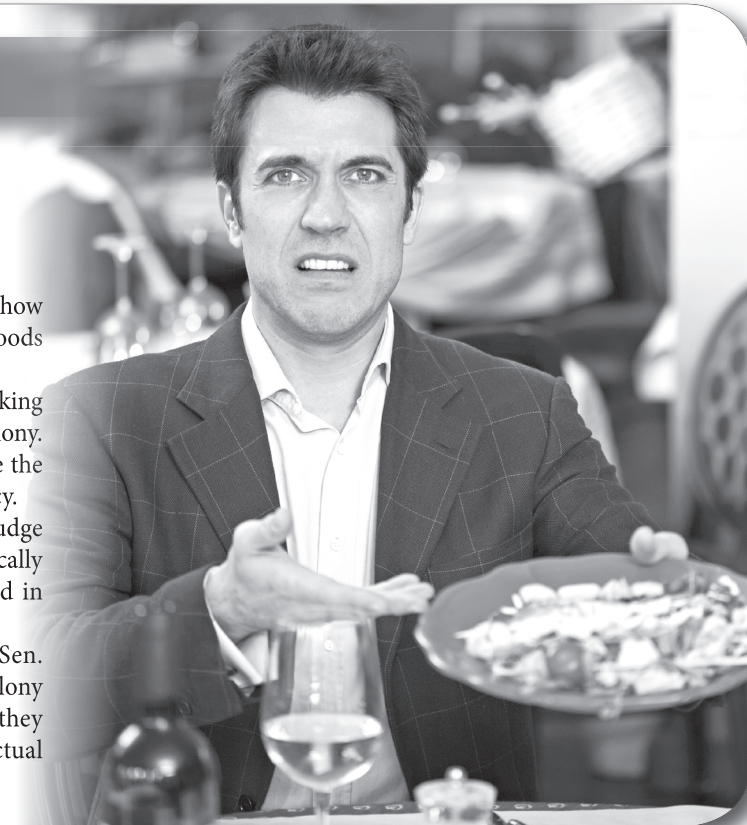

The bill says the family has to have "a lawfully married couple in a stable relationship." It doesn't specify straight couples, but Knox previously has said publicly that he believes that children usually do best in homes with both a father and mother.

Farm Bureau wants to change ‘right to farm’ measure

LINCOLN — One of Nebraska’s largest farm groups says it wants to change a ballot proposal that would guarantee farming and ranching rights in the state Constitution.

The Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation says it will recommend that lawmakers place the “right to farm” measure in state statute rather than the Constitution. If approved by lawmakers, the measure by Sen. John Kuehn of Heartwell would appear on the November general election ballot for voters to approve or reject.

Nebraska Farm Bureau lobbyist Bruce Rieker says the current proposal doesn’t clearly define “agriculture,” and placing it in the Constitution would leave it up to the courts to interpret instead of the Legislature. In addition, he says opponents of the ballot measure might bombard voters with “misinformation” about modern agriculture.

Public lands defenders protest

RENO — Dozens of protesters with signs supporting federal ownership of public land joined hundreds of Ted Cruz supporters lined up for the presidential hopeful’s rally in Reno the day before the Feb. 23 Republican caucuses.

Cruz has promised to “take on” the Bureau of Land Management and other federal agencies that he says are killing jobs. The Texas senator said he wants millions of acres of federal land in Nevada turned over to state control.

In Reno, about 50 demonstrators chanted “Keep public lands in public hands” late Feb. 22 while waving signs that said Nevada’s skiers, hikers and hunters “Love our public lands” and “Public lands, not for sale.”

State adopts new rules for pot producers

ALBUQUERQUE — The names of licensed nonprofit medical marijuana producers and those seeking licenses from the state will become public under new rules taking effect next week, the New Mexico Department of Health announced Feb. 22.

The confidentiality surrounding producers was challenged last year in a lawsuit filed by freelance journalist Peter St. Cyr and the New Mexico Foundation for Open Government. They argued the health department was violating public records law by keeping producers’ names secret.

The agency has been reworking the rules since July, when Gov. Susana Martinez ordered officials to make the information public in the interest of transparency.

Probe finds hostile work environment at MVD

BISMARCK — An external investigation of the state Department of Transportation’s Motor Vehicle Division has concluded that the agency has a hostile work environment due to stressful conditions and an “overbearing director.”

North Dakota Human Resources Management Services launched the probe at the request of the DOT last fall. It has resulted in a search for a new division director and a review of policies, The Bismarck Tribune reported.

“There are many state agencies that are experiencing some of these issues due to increased public service demands brought about by the sustained boom in the oil field,” the investigation report said. “However, the intense work environment coupled with what appears to be a demanding and overbearing director led to the frustrations, perceptions and problems reported.”

The probe stemmed from a dispute between an employee and a supervisor in which the employee was fired but later offered a new position after twice appealing her termination.

2 arrested in prison smuggling attempt

OKLAHOMA CITY — Two people accused of trying to smuggle several items, including 27

A news release says that the District 18 Drug and Violent Crimes Task Force arrested a 23-year-old man and a 20-year-old woman Feb. 21 in Hartshorne during a traffic stop. They were arrested on complaints of conspiracy to deliver contraband to a state penal institution and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute.

The two suspects are also accused of trying to smuggle 2 pounds of smokeless tobacco, 32 cell phones and other contraband. Task force Director Tim Turner said at least three prison drops have been attempted across the state in the past month.

He is accused of using task force funds for personal purchases beginning in January 2014. He is also accused of using the money to pay for breast implants for sheriff’s office employee, Krista Jean Mudrick, who has pleaded not guilty to making false statements in the case.

Texas

Ex-death row inmate sues for $2M in wrongful conviction

HOUSTON — A former death row inmate has filed a request for almost $2 million in state compensation saying he spent more than 12 years in prison because he was wrongfully convicted of murder.

Alfred Dewayne Brown filed the request Feb. 22. The 33-year-old Houston man was released in June after spending nearly a decade on Texas’ death row for the fatal shooting of a Houston police officer. Brown was set free after Harris County District Attorney Devon Anderson dismissed the capital murder charge against him.

Brown won a new trial in 2014 after the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals agreed that telephone records bolstering his claims of innocence in the death of Houston Officer Charles Clark were withheld from Brown’s 2005 trial. A homicide investigator found the records while cleaning his garage.

Utah

Lawmakers advance broad medical marijuana bill

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah state senators gave preliminary approval Feb. 22 to a medical marijuana proposal that would legalize edible, vapor and topical pot products.

Lawmakers voted 15-13 to advance the bill, saying it could help those with certain debilitating conditions who have not found relief through other medications. Sponsor Sen. Mark Madsen, R-Eagle Mountain, said the plan would allow tens of thousands of residents with those medical conditions to use the drug but would ban smoking it.

During the debate, he promised that the proposal is in no way a first step toward the state legalizing recreational marijuana.

Washington

6 arrested in online child sex sting

SEATTLE — Washington state authorities say six people have been arrested in an undercover operation targeting suspects who exploit children online.

The Seattle Times reports that the Washington State Patrol says the suspects were arrested in Snohomish County on Feb. 21 after the group had made arrangements to meet with undercover detectives online. Authorities say the operation revealed evidence indicating there were at least three child victims.

The identities of those arrested have not yet been released. They are being investigated on suspicion of several charges, including child rape, commercial sex abuse of a minor and child pornography.

The operation was a collaborative effort by the Patrol’s Missing and Exploited Children Task Force, the FBI, the Snohomish County Sheriff’s Office and the state Attorney General’s Office.

TIMES PAST

Old Nogales City Hall

Nogales City Hall was commissioned by the Nogales Volunteer Fire Department in 1914, opened in 1915, and served as Town Hall and later City Hall for 65 years.

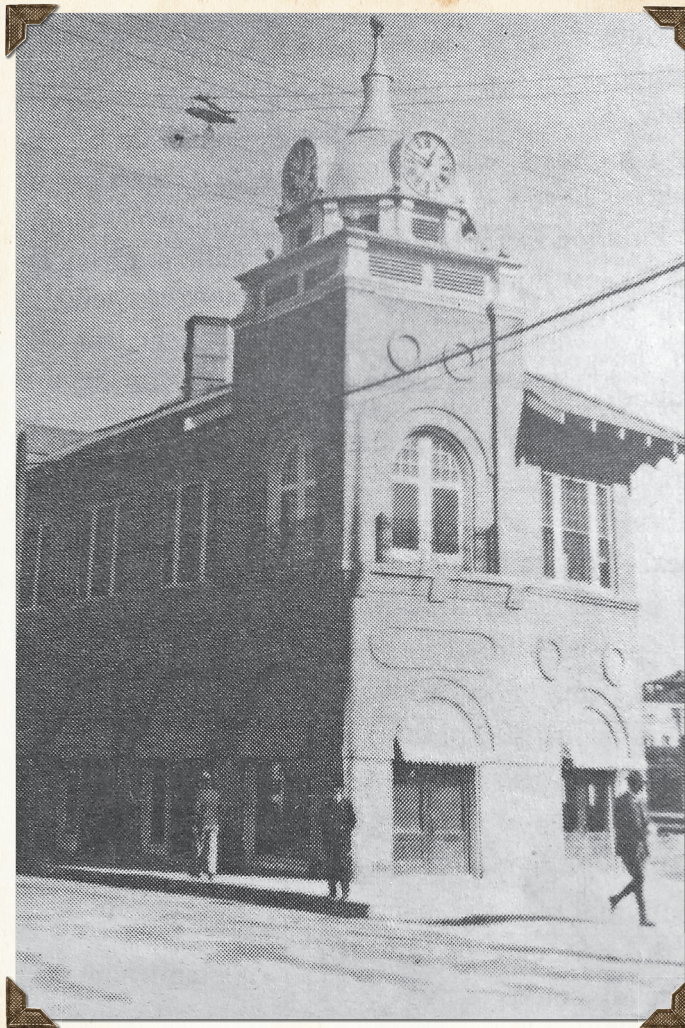

Constructed in brick with a stucco covering, accouterments included electricity, indoor plumbing and steam heat. Cooling was provided by the method most used in public buildings of the day – electric fans and open windows. The ground floor was occupied by the city administration offices and the police department, whose space included two cramped cells in which to incarcerate law breakers. The largest area was claimed by the fire department. The north end of the building was leased to the Santa Cruz County physician.

The building's most interesting feature was its second floor, designed for use by the prestigious Santa Cruz Club. Architect Henry O. Jaastad created an elegant ballroom with a mezzanine and music room. Included were a kitchen, ladies' powder room, men's shower, card room, billiard room and a well-equipped reading room – quite a setup for the space above what was really just a dreary little jail.

In 1916, the volunteer fire department discovered that the mortgage on the building was too great a burden on its resources and asked the city to take it over. The city agreed and generously allowed the firefighters to share use of the opulent second story rent free as long as the fire department continued to "actively assist in fighting fires."

In a town that loved a parade, the marquee above the front door (just beyond the utility pole and not shown in this photo) quickly came to be used as a reviewing stand for dignitaries. In 1917, while touring the United States, Mexican General (later president) Alvaro Obregon used the marquee for reviewing American troops from nearby Camp Little.

As the city of Nogales grew, the old City Hall seemed to shrink. Space became an acute problem, and in 1978, the city administration relocated to a spacious new complex outside the downtown area.

This is the Nogales City Hall as it looked in 1935. The building was designed by architect Henry O. Jaastad, perennial mayor of Tucson and creator of some of the state's finest public and residential structures.

In February 2015, the residents of Nogales and a brass band from its sister city across the border celebrated the 100th anniversary of the Old City Hall.

But cracks are showing in the reputed Republican bastion built on dominance in the Arizona Legislature and Governor's Office.

Little state oversight of Commerce Authority

When the Arizona Department of Commerce becomes the Arizona Commerce Authority, the quasi-private agency will be free of much of the oversight and regulations that accompany being a fully public part of the state government. The Commerce Authority will have leeway and latitude available to few, if any state agencies. Some in the Legislature are wary of the Commerce Authority's Independence.

Abortion bill sponsor unfazed by doubts cast on his evidence

As he implored his colleagues to vote for a bill restricting abortions, Rep. Steve Montenegro waved a copy of The Economist magazine whose cover was splashed with the frightening headline, "Genocide." At the House floor session on Feb. 21, Montenegro asserted the magazine story offered proof that Arizona needed to outlaw abortions performed to prevent the births of female and minority babies.

Legislative tax fight approaches round 2

For the second consecutive session, the House and Senate are headed toward an ideological collision over the form of a promised multi-million dollar tax cut. House Republicans are assuming their usual role of championing the need for property-tax relief and reform. Senate Republicans again are siding with Gov. Fife Symington in seeking a personal income tax cut.

Senators drop effort to push abortion bill

Efforts by conservative lawmakers to push abortion legislation fizzled this week after the Senate GOP caucus decided that dealing with the matter now isn't worth the trouble. A handful of senators for the past three years have tried to get legislation heard that would require a minor to get a parent's consent before having an abortion. But they were blocked from bringing any abortion-related bill to the floor by a moratorium imposed by Senate President John Greene.

Public Notices

Public notice has been an important part of the public's ability to monitor government actions that affect them since the founding of our country. - Independent. The publisher of the notice is without a vested interest in the content of the notice and free of any appearance of conflicts of interest
- Verifiable. The independent publisher is able to certify the notice is published intact, without subsequent alteration, on time, and for the full duration of its required publication schedule.
- Archived. A tamper-proof copy of the notice is maintained for a significant period, preferably in perpetuity
- Accessible. The notice is available to the public.
