CANINE COMFORT

Bill would give children right to have a dog nearby while testifying

GARY GRADO

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Rachel Mitchell, who prosecutes sex crimes, has seen the fear in child victims leading up to their courtroom testimony.

In one case, an 8-year-old girl “was literally sliding down the wall in the hallway,” as the judge and other adults coaxed her into the courtroom to testify. Her testimony counted for nothing. There was a mistrial and she had to do it again in a new trial.

Her second testimony was a different story, said Mitchell, a 20-year veteran in the Maricopa County Attorney’s Office Sex Crimes Bureau, which she now leads. By that time the Maricopa County Attorney’s Office had acquired Sam, a golden retriever and Irish setter mix, to provide comfort for the children who have to testify about traumatic events.

“That kid went right in, Sam was with her, she testified. She was calm and was able to be on and off the stand in 30 minutes,” Mitchell said.

County attorneys in Maricopa and Pima counties have had dogs for such use since 2009, but a bill sailing through the Legislature would make it a right for child victims to have them at their side when testifying.

The bill, HB2375, would also give judges the authority to allow adults to use a dog in court, too.

Mitchell said some judges have denied the state’s request in a few cases to allow the dogs.

And defense attorneys often contest their use. But case law from other states has fallen on the side of prosecutors.

To ensure a dog’s presence doesn’t unfairly influence the jury, the bill also has a requirement for judges to instruct jurors on the role of the dog – telling them it is a trained animal.

TEDDY BEARS AND TORI

Stuffed animals have long been the comfort item of choice for firefighters, police officers and prosecutors to calm traumatized children.

But Mitchell said research exists showing dogs have a soothing effect on anxious people. Helping a person relax “goes to the truth of the matter” in testifying, she said.

Studies between 1983 and 1996 showed that petting a dog lowered blood pressure and slowed the heart rate in tense children, and it took only a few minutes to bond.

“I’ve seen kids with Teddy bears on the stand, but I’ve also seen kids with dogs on the stand and it’s a remarkable difference,” Mitchell said. “A dog just does something for a child’s feeling of safety that a stuffed animal cannot do.”

Sam was the Maricopa County Attorney Office’s first dog. He was later joined by Elle, a golden retriever, and Tori, a Labrador retriever.

Our most vulnerable Arizonans need your help...

People with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDDs) are served by direct support professionals (DSPs). DSPs support people in a wide range of roles – skill training, companionship, assistance with medication and food – and that time spent together can change someone's life.

Currently, there are not enough resources built into state AHCCCS funding for wages for these community agency employees, many of whom make between $8 – 9.25/hour.

This has led to a 56% urban and a 70-85% rural area DSP turnover rate, creating a shortage of these workers, which is devastating to those they serve.

This is a crisis for anyone with a disability.

The compassion DSPs provide is a skill and a gift. If we cannot pay people to do what they are gifted to do, then the system is failing them and those they serve.

Please support a funding increase for IDD services in DES and help us give people with disabilities the basic security everyone deserves.

HALF WAY HOME

Here are highlights of the Arizona Legislature's first 50 days — Jan. 11, through Feb. 29

Jan. 11: Gov. Doug Ducey jumped on Arizona's most populous neighbor in his annual State of the State address. Ducey commented on "California-style chaos," and outlined how Arizona was "on the rise" in comparison.

Jan. 13: The House of Representatives passed its first measure of the session, which bars so-called "revenge porn," with unusual swiftness. The measure passed unanimously with one legislator not voting. Rep. J.D. Mesnard, R-Chandler, sponsored the bill for a third time. The bill makes it a crime to share nude photos of another person with intent to harm that person.

Jan. 14: A proposal to legalize marijuana in Arizona is on track to qualify for the ballot as the state joins a growing movement looking to loosen pot laws around the country in the November elections. A spokesman for Arizona's leading recreational marijuana initiative says the measure has already collected about 140,000 of the 150,000 signatures necessary to get on the ballot.

Jan. 14: Following allegations that he'd improperly used state vehicles for personal reasons and fired several employees and replaced them with friends, Arizona State Lottery Director Tony Bouie resigned his position to avoid being a "distraction," according to the Governor's Office.

Jan. 15: Following through on his pledge to hold the line on new spending, Gov. Doug Ducey unveiled a proposed $9.5 billion spending plan for fiscal year 2017. Some agencies and programs that took the biggest hits during last year's budget crisis won't see that funding restored, including universities and vocational school districts.

Jan. 19: The Pima County Board of Supervisors appointed Matt Kopec to fill an Arizona House vacancy created by Rep. Victoria Steele's resignation to focus on her congressional run.

Jan. 28: Arizona Corporation Commissioner Bob Burns issued a demand to Arizona Public Service: Turn over your books.

Feb. 8: A proposed overhaul of the Arizona Commerce Authority by Gov. Doug Ducey will help set the stage for future reductions in regulations and taxes that are deemed to put Arizona at an economic disadvantage.

Feb. 9: Sen. Adam Driggs won't seek re-election this fall. Rep. Kate Brophy McGee, R-Phoenix, who has served in the House since 2011, will run for the Legislative District 28 Senate seat in place of Driggs. She will likely face fellow Rep. Eric Meyer, a Paradise Valley Democrat termed out of the House.

Feb. 11: The state's police regulatory board fired longtime Executive Director Lyle Mann.

Feb. 16: Gov. Doug Ducey signed two bills aimed at reforming Arizona's underfunded pension system for law enforcement officers and firefighters. But voters will get the final say.

Feb. 17: The Senate unanimously passed a bill restoring most cuts to high school technical education districts and Gov. Doug Ducey promptly signed it into law. The bill restores $29 million of $30 million cut from 14 Joint Technical Education Districts last year.

Feb. 22: Senators voted to do what foes have argued has been their agenda all along – allow every one of the 1.1 million students in Arizona to attend private and parochial schools with tax dollars.

Feb. 23: The Senate voted without any debate to pass a bill altering the power between the State Board of Education and state superintendent of public instruction. The 24-5 vote sends SB1416 to the House for consideration. The bill puts the board in control of hiring, firing and supervising its own workers and puts certain administrative functions under the control of the board.

Feb. 24: Calling claims that fetal research helps cure diseases is a lie, state senators voted to outlaw scientific research on aborted fetuses.

Feb. 25: Conservative Arizona Congressman Matt Salmon will not seek re-election this November, saying he wants to spend more time with his family. He endorsed state Senate President Andy Biggs as his successor.

Feb. 26: The House created a new travel policy after an Arizona Capitol Times story revealed that a handful of House Republican leaders and top staffers drove more than 36,000 miles in state vehicles in 2015, sometimes for political or personal purposes. In an email announcing the changes, House Speaker David Gowan said it's his "sincere hope that this memorializes appropriate, reasonable, accurate and efficient travel practices of the House." Also, Gowan repaid the state more than $12,000 for mileage reimbursements he claimed for trips that he took in state vehicles and for days he claimed to work but did not.

Feb. 29: Legislation to let every child attend private and parochial schools on the public dime is on life support, and possibly dead — at least in its current form. Rep. Justin Olson, R-Mesa, conceded he lacks sufficient votes for final approval of HB2482.

Ducey chief Adams won't run for Congress

Saying he's blessed to continue serving as Gov. Doug Ducey's chief of staff, Kirk Adams decided against making another run for Arizona's 5th Congressional District and will remain with the Ducey administration.

Adams

The former speaker of the Arizona House of Representatives announced on Facebook on Feb. 29 that he would not run for the seat opened up by Congressman Matt Salmon's surprise retirement announcement last week.

Salmon

"Because of Governor Ducey, Arizona is on the rise and it is both exciting and rewarding to be a part of it. I can think of no work I'd rather be doing. I am truly humbled by the many texts, emails, and phone calls of support, but I have decided to continue serving where I am, and leave the race for AZ Congressional District 5 to others," Adams wrote in a Facebook post.

Biggs

Adams lost the CD5 Republican primary to Salmon in 2012, and speculation about his intentions began nearly as soon as Salmon announced his retirement. The possibility of an Adams campaign, however, was complicated by the fact that his former business partner and campaign consultant Sean Noble, who ran his 2012 race, is now working for Andy Biggs, Salmon's handpicked choice of successor.

While Adams won't be running, he insinuated in his social media post that he won't be supporting Biggs, the current Senate president, with whom Adams had a contentious relationship during the years they served together in the Legislature.

"As a life-long resident of the district, former state elected representative, and father of six, I care deeply about the quality of our representation in Washington. That's why I join with my fellow voters in looking for a candidate with the capacity to lead and to wield influence on the biggest issues facing our country," Adams wrote. "It's not enough to send someone from this district who says the right things but lacks the capacity to actually get it done."

Biggs is the only person to have declared his candidacy since Salmon's announcement, and has the full backing of the outgoing congressman. Several others are considering a run for the East Valley-based congressional seat, including Maricopa County Supervisor Denny Barney, Rep. Justin Olson, former Mesa Mayor Scott Smith, Rep. Kelly Townsend and Sen. Bob Worsley.

Secretary of state forms advisory council

Reagan

Secretary of State Michele Reagan has formed the "Secretary's Technology, Transparency and Commerce Council" to provide feedback and support for her policy agenda. The council is made up of business leaders whose goal is to assist her in better understanding the statewide business community "as well as provide unique insight and support throughout her term of service."

Reagan chose Rodney Glassman Ryley Carlock & Applewhite to co-chair the council.

The council also will include a standing seat for the state Senate president and speaker of the House. It will hold public meetings quarterly in the Governor's Conference Room at the Capitol.

New food stamp bill focuses on welfare card photo, prohibited locations

RACHEL LEINGANG

rachel.leingang@azcapitoltimes.com

The Arizona House of Representatives approved a bill on March 1 that would add a photo to welfare benefit cards after the sponsor promised to get rid of provisions that would drop as many as 120,000 from federal benefit programs.

But, opponents of the bill say, adding a photo to Electronic Benefit Transfer cards would limit access, and it's unclear what the benefits would be.

The bill's sponsor, Mesa Republican Rep. Justin Olson, said the photo would help prevent fraud and could tamp down on a "secondary market" for benefit cards.

As originally written, HB2596 would prohibit the state from applying for any waivers to federal requirements for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, commonly known as food stamps.

Federal law says able-bodied adults without kids can only get SNAP benefits for a maximum of 3 months within a 36-month time limit. But the state's Department of Economic Security has a waiver to this requirement due to unemployment rates of more than 10 percent in some parts of the state.

Currently, the agency has more than 78,000 people who are considered able-bodied adults without kids who would lose benefits after the 3-month limit, according to legislative analysts.

The bill, approved 34-26, also proposed to change the way DES could calculate income for SNAP. Now, the state uses a higher gross income level of 185 percent of the federal poverty level, then allows people to deduct payments for things like child care or housing to arrive at net income. In general, people with a net income below 100 percent of the federal poverty level can receive SNAP benefits.

The bill as proposed would have changed the 185 percent to 130 percent of the poverty level, which would reduce or get rid of benefit payments for about 40,000 people, about half of whom are children.

After the bill was failing on the House floor during a final vote on March 1, Olson promised he would take out the waiver provision once the bill goes to the Senate. Later, he told The Associated Press he would take out the income calculation change as well.

Nearly 1 million people received SNAP benefits in the state in January 2016. The average benefit was $120 per person, according to legislative analysts.

Olson said prohibiting the waiver wasn't designed to save the state money, but instead was meant to encourage people to find work and become financially independent.

DES estimates fraud amounted to about $1 million in fiscal year 2015, though the agency noted the amount may be inflated because it doesn't account for potential administrative errors, according to DES spokeswoman Tasya Peterson. In 2014, the amount was about $1.7 million, and it was $1.1 mil-

HB2596, AS ORIGINALLY PROPOSED

- Would have prohibited the state from applying for any waivers to federal requirements for the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, which would have dropped about 80,000 able-bodied adults without kids off the program.

- Would have changed the way income is calculated. Now, the state uses a higher gross income level of 185 percent of the federal poverty level, then allows people to deduct payments for things like child care or housing to arrive at net income. The bill as proposed would have changed the 185 percent to 130 percent of the poverty level, which would reduce or get rid of benefit payments for about 40,000 people, about half of whom are children.

- Proposes a photo identification option be added to Electronic Benefit Transfer cards, which would cost $12 million in the first year and $8.4 million annually after that.

- Prohibits using EBT cards for certain activities and at certain places, including at a jewelry store, tattoo parlor, massage parlor, body piercing parlor, spa and nail salon, lingerie shop, tobacco paraphernalia or vapor cigarette store, psychic and fortune telling business, bail bond office, movie theater, public swimming pool, cruise ship, theme park, purchase of cigarettes or any other tobacco products, travel services provided by a travel agent, tattoos, purchase of lottery tickets, purchase of sexually-oriented adult materials, purchase of tickets for a concert, sporting event or other entertainment event.

- If a person requests three replacement EBT cards within a one-year period, the person would be required to do a face-to-face interview with a fraud investigator at DES. If the person doesn't show up for the interview, they could be dropped from benefits within 10 days.

- Requires DES to put a spending report for SNAP and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families on its website, which would note how much of the dollars are spent out-of-state and how much and where the money is spent within the state.

HB2596, AS PROMISED BY OLSON

- During a final vote in the House, Olson said he would get rid of the two major provisions that would drop people from the program: the waiver prohibition and the change in income calculation. The bill wasn't amended in the House, but Olson promised to amend it in the Senate.

- The other provisions, including the photo ID option and the places EBT cards can't be used, are presumably still included in the bill.

lion in 2013.

Though the bill would no longer drop the 120,000 from benefits, it would still require adding a photo to electronic benefit cards and includes prohibitions on using welfare dollars at certain places and for certain activities.

Legislative analysts projected the photo ID measure would cost $12 million in the first year to get the system and equipment required, then $8.4 million annually after that.

The bill says an EBT card should have a photo on it "unless the recipient declines to have the photograph included." But, Democratic Rep. Stefanie Mach pointed out in committee and during debate, there's no process in place for how a person would refuse the photo requirement or how they would be informed that it's optional.

In Maine, which has an optional photo provision for EBT cards, recent stories from the Portland Press Herald say benefit recipients have been getting letters from the state telling them to add photos to their cards. The U.S. Department of Agriculture previously told the state it wasn't being clear enough to recipients that the photo was an option and not mandatory, according to the Portland Press Herald.

In an emailed response to questions, Peterson said the photo ID option means the state would face additional scrutiny from the federal government to make sure state law comports with federal SNAP guidelines. There could also potentially be "financial implications if implementation imposes additional conditions of eligibility or adversely impacts the ability to access Nutrition Assistance," she said. The state would also need to submit a plan to the feds that would need to be approved before implementing the photo policy, which has taken about two years for other states, she said.

There are also several provisions in the bill that would exclude using federal benefits at certain places and for certain purchases, like tattoo parlors, nail salons, tobacco stores, psychic businesses, public swimming pools, cruise ships, theme parks, lottery tickets and "sexually oriented adult materials."

Peterson said EBT reports can identify the place that an EBT card is used and the amount of the purchase, but not the specific items that are purchased. In addition, while the EBT location information includes a business name, it is not always possible to determine what type of store it is based on the name or the name of the parent corporation.

Olson touted the bill as a fraud prevention measure and a way to encourage people to get back to work so they could climb the economic ladder. Olson said other states that have enacted similar reforms have seen people build stronger families and communities, and that marriage rates had even increased because of the reforms. He also mentioned several times that the bill stems from 1990s welfare reform measures signed into law by former President Bill Clinton.

"(Reforms) were enacted with that intent to move people from dependency to being productive members of society, and they had that impact. That's a fact. That's what occurred," Olson said.

Former lawmaker Laura Knaperek loses battle with cancer

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Laura Knaperek, a 10-year member of the House and staunch supporter of a law giving terminally ill patients new rights, died March 3 after a three-year battle with cancer. She was 60.

The Tempe Republican, a mother of six, served in the Legislature from 1995 to 2002 and again from 2005 to 2006.

Former Secretary of State Ken Bennett, who served in the Senate from 1999 to 2006, said Knaperek was one of the more influential lawmakers in 2001 and 2002, leading the House Appropriations Committee.

Bennett said she struck up a friendship and political partnership of sorts with former Sen. Ruth Solomon, a Tucson Democrat who led the Senate Appropriations Committee, and they became a force in the Legislature. At the time, the Senate was split evenly between Republicans and Democrats.

"It didn't take folks long to realize those two ladies were working more together than they were apart and you didn't want to cross one at the risk of

Knaperek

"People who have a terminally ill disease have to live in the moment, they have to live in the day, they also have to know there's something to live for and there's something to help them to achieve that."

— Laura Knaperek

crossing the other even though they were of opposite parties," Bennett said. "Neither one of them were ever really accused of abandoning their principles."

Their shared power prompted Bennett to dub them "Thelma and Louise" in his 2002 version of the sine die song, an annual tune he pens to make light of the legislative session. "Thelma and Louise" is a 1991 road movie featuring two female characters who become outlaws.

Knaperek's most recent political effort was helping in 2014 to lead a successful effort to pass Proposition 303, known as Right to Try. The measure allows terminally ill patients to use drugs that have been through the first phase of clinical testing, but not granted FDA approval.

She was diagnosed with ovarian cancer in October 2012. By the time the ballot measure passed she had gone through two rounds of chemotherapy.

Knaperek said in a September 2014 interview the Right to Try law was an issue of personal liberty and she wasn't involved simply because of her diagnosis.

"People who have a terminally ill disease have to live in the moment, they have to live in the day, they also have to know there's something to live for and there's something to help them to achieve that," Knaperek said.

Current lawmakers who served with Knaperek remembered her on the House floor March 3.

Rep. Heather Carter, a Cave Creek Republican, said Knaperek sponsored legislation to name a state butterfly, and Knaperek had stated she didn't want to be remembered for it.

Carter said it was worth remembering because Knaperek worked with children around the state to come up with one, which turned out to be the two-tailed swallowtail.

When questioned about the butterfly legislation in 2001, Knaperek said that for some people it was a big deal.

Rep. John Allen, a Phoenix Republican, said he remembered she always asked how he was going to vote on bills, and one time he warned her he was going to vote against one of hers, and she still questioned him about his vote after he did.

"She always saw things as if she was just on the precipice of winning," Allen said.

And that's how she was in her battle with cancer, he said.

"She was a sunrise person, not a sunset person," Allen said.

Kyle Moyer, a political consultant who was a close friend of hers, said in a Facebook post Knaperek's greatest love was her family and she rarely had a conversation without mentioning her husband, her children or grandchildren.

"As her daughter Sarah said to me, 'My mom got her wings,'" Moyer said. ☞

School officials worry passage of Prop. 123 could dim enthusiasm for bond elections

All signs point to passage of Proposition 123, but some school districts are worried about voter fatigue when they return to the polls in November to ask for more money.

The situation leaves schools districts with the task of reminding their voters the ballot measure is just a first step in comprehensively funding schools, said Chuck Essigs, a lobbyist with Arizona Association of School Business Officials.

"It's a difficult message to deliver," Essigs said.

Voters will cast their ballots on Prop. 123 in a May 17 special election, and some school districts are already gearing up for bond and override elections in November.

The measure would provide an additional $3.5 billion in K-12 education funding over the course of 10 years, about $2.2 billion of which would come from increased distributions from the state's Permanent Land Endowment Trust Fund.

Its passage looks promising. The campaign in support of the measure, Let's Vote Yes for Arizona's Schools, has reported nearly $4 million in contributions and there is no organized opposition.

Cathy Thompson, director of business services for Washington Elementary School District, said the ballot measure offers a false sense of security, however.

She said voters might believe the measure is a fix-all, and she bases that on the fact many of her own employees were under that belief when they started meeting to discuss potential bond measures.

Thompson said Prop. 123 will provide her district $5 million a year for the next five years.

"To give my employees a raise is going to take most of that money and I still have $100 million worth of capital needs," Thompson said.

Washington Elementary School District has 23,000 students in 32 schools. Thompson said many of the buildings are 40 to 50 years old and are in need of repair and upgrading.

She said the district can get grant money from the state to replace broken equipment, but that doesn't allow for being proactive and replacing something before it breaks.

Tim Ogle, executive director of the Arizona School Boards Association, said he's not concerned voters will quash bond requests.

"We think the flavor of the electorate now is to try to help," Ogle said.

He points to the overall success of school bond elections in November 2015, which came just a few days after the Legislature voted to put Prop. 123 on the ballot.

He said that gave "heightened sensitivity to our starving schools" and helped in the bond and override elections. Voters approved 36 of 47 bond or budget override requests. ☞

CAPITOL QUOTES

"When I lost those benefits, I did not suddenly become a more responsible member of society. ... I simply became a mother who could no longer afford to adequately feed her children."

— Rep. Celeste Plumlee, D-Tempe, saying that taking welfare benefits away from thousands of Arizonans wouldn't make them better citizens.

"I was wrong. It's not the first time in my life (I was wrong.)"

— Lobbyist Chuck Coughlin on his assessment of Donald Trump.

"It's time for the governor to quit being the 'Full Employment Relief Act' for Andy Tobin."

— Attorney Tom Ryan, referring to a strike-everything amendment that would allow Corporation Commissioner Tobin, whose son-in-law works for SolarCity, to vote on solar-related matters.

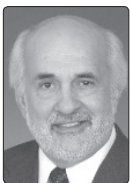

"I'm actually grateful that our public universities don't have free speech zones. But our community colleges do. And I want to see those free speech zones go away."

— Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix, on his bill prohibiting universities and community colleges from limiting where the right of free speech can be exercised.

"If you're really low spending in your state, it still costs you money to fix your roofs. It costs you money to heat your buildings, cool your buildings, pay for the lights and everything, whether you're in a state that spends a lot of money on education or a very low amount."

— AASBO lobbyist Chuck Essigs, saying it's not surprising classroom spending as a share of all dollars continues to decline.

Adult Protective Services reduces backlog by 75%

TIMOTHY JEFFRIES

In response to the Feb. 15 article "From X-rays to highways, backlogs affect several state agencies," I would like to provide additional information regarding Adult Protective Services (APS). In March 2015, APS had an open workload of 12,676 cases requiring review. By January 2016, that caseload was reduced to 4,443 through the use of a private contractor and the implementation of a change in management technique, the Four Disciplines of Execution.

It must be noted that the incredible progress made by APS was featured this past weekend in The Arizona Republic as an example of what DCS should do to reduce caseloads. By using a contractor, The Republic reported, the Department of Economic Security was able to direct its staff to handle incoming cases and massively reduce its existing caseload.

We continue to use a contractor to provide APS support in the investigative process, focusing on older open cases. The staff and systems are in place to investigate incoming new cases and to ensure existing clients needs are met prior to their cases being closed. Our contractor and the Four Disciplines of Execution is imperative to the overall strategy DES employs to reduce caseloads and the amount of time it takes to complete the evaluation and investigation and make appropriate community referrals.

Each year in Arizona, DES receives thousands of reports alleging neglect, abuse, exploitation, and self-neglect of vulnerable adults. During fiscal year 2015, APS received nearly 13,800 reports. During the past five years, the number of APS reports has grown by 79 percent. APS investigators were faced with a crisis that demanded immediate attention and resolution. Gov. Doug Ducey and the Arizona Legislature agreed APS Investigators needed more support. To address this need, $3 million was added to the 2015 budget to manage caseload growth. Similarly, the 2016 budget increased this budget by another $1.2M to handle caseload growth.

APS is laser-focused on better outcomes for vulnerable adults in need of protection and assistance. Arizona's APS program is one of only a few programs in the nation to have a dedicated unit for financial exploitation, and has been featured as an example of what other states should be doing in this ever-increasing area of crime against the elderly. Significant progress continues to be made as APS is on its way to being the best in the country in caring for one of our most vulnerable populations, and our agency is very proud of this.

— Timothy Jeffries is the director of the Arizona Department of Economic Security.

"We continue to use a contractor to provide APS support in the investigative process, focusing on older open cases. The staff and systems are in place to investigate incoming new cases and to ensure existing clients needs are met prior to their cases being closed. Can Arizona afford to lose $100 million a year?

VALERIE SPICER

Recent legislative action backed by fantasy sports interests signals an alarming trend toward undermining the state's compacts with tribal nations. The Arizona Indian Gaming Association represents 18 member tribes, and we are charged with vigorously protecting the compacts, especially as it relates to tribal gaming exclusivity, for several important reasons.

“Finding a means to circumvent tribal compact language is putting at risk $100 million a year in state funding and is a practice that needs to be stopped here. The language of the poison pill and what it protects is far too important. Neither the state nor the tribes should have to exhaust countless dollars protecting its intent.”

First and foremost, the compacts have served the state and tribes well for nearly 20 years. Since 2002, more than $1 billion in revenue sharing contributions have flowed through the Arizona Benefits Fund to important state programs like education, tourism, trauma care, wildlife conservation and cities and towns.

Gaming operations statewide also employ more than 15,000 Arizonans, both non-tribal and tribal, making tribal gaming one of the top 10 largest employment sectors in our state.

This economic impact also extends far beyond reservations. In 2014 alone, tribal governments generated more than $2.5 billion in estimated gross state product, including $1.6 billion in labor income and $271 million in state and federal taxes other than income taxes.

These long-term financial commitments to all Arizonans are precisely the reason why tribes hold the exclusive right to gaming, and why the poison pill provision looms large when anything threatens this exclusivity.

A bitter poison pill to swallow

The poison pill provision was always intended as a means of protection for both the state and the tribes, protecting tribal gaming exclusivity for tribes and the state's goal of limited gaming.

This balance is struck because states and tribes each have sovereign powers to set the terms of gambling within their own jurisdictions. They cannot tax each other any more than Kansas can tax New Mexico.

For their part, tribal policymakers aim for reservation economic self-reliance and have done so since the onset of reservation life. The compacts also advance that goal by providing for intertribal device leasing and by setting the stage for Class III capital investment, among other things.

Because the compacts keep tribal gaming constrained when Arizona gaming is constrained, and loosens the constraints only if and when Arizona liberalizes gaming, and had not unduly compromised tribal sovereignty, revenue sharing was approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

With the passage of legislation or a vote of the people that expands gaming beyond what existed at the signing of the tribal-state compacts in 2002, the poison pill is invoked. Whether it is fantasy sports, or any other form of gaming – each tribe has the legal right to dispute this change in law and discontinue revenue sharing immediately. The limited gaming we sought to establish would also be non-existent.

Unlimited gaming in Arizona

If the state loosens its policies of limited gambling, the tribes will no longer be subject to limits or required to make the contributions. With an expansion in gambling policy, the compacts' constraints on total slot machines per tribe and per facility will no longer bind. Moreover, the sliding-scale contribution obligations will be replaced by a flat, across the board contribution of 0.75 percent of Class III net win (Compact $3.h).

We encourage voters, the Legislature and benefits fund recipients to fully consider the complex implications for something as seemingly simple as fantasy sports.

Is there enough reward for the tremendous amount of risk to our economy, our employment base and our quality of life here in Arizona? Is there any reward at all, for that matter? There's no proposed revenue sharing from fantasy gaming. Nor is there an agreement to support problem gambling or place limitations on the amount of gaming. Where are the regulations that are referenced in SB1515, and yet not spelled out in the bill?

A billion dollar gamble

The compacts provide countless benefits to many. Arizona gamblers see ample opportunity to play well-regulated games in competing facilities. Arizona taxpayers see millions of dollars added to state and local treasuries, with potentially a billion more to come.

Tribes produce benefits for their own reservation economies, local county economies, and the state economy. Thus, contrary to all-too-commonly circulated misperceptions that compacts are an unfair ethnic entitlement, they are the sensible result of intergovernmental negotiation that advances numerous state and tribal goals.

Finding a means to circumvent tribal compact language is putting at risk $100 million a year in state funding and is a practice that needs to be stopped here. The language of the poison pill and what it protects is far too important. Neither the state nor the tribes should have to exhaust countless dollars protecting its intent.

Arizona is counting on tribes and tribal gaming to help strengthen our economy. We are counting on legislators and elected officials to protect the compacts and to keep Arizona's agreement with Arizona tribes.

Technical education vital to keeping Arizona, nation's economy running

MICHAEL ROMANO

With career technical education in the spotlight at the state Legislature during the past few weeks, it is a perfect time to share some hard-hitting but perhaps little-known, statistics.

Transportation is the fourth-largest economic sector in the nation, contributing more $1 trillion to the U.S. Gross Domestic Product, and more than 16 million jobs. Today, one of every seven jobs in the nation is in this industry. By the year 2024, the U.S. Department of Labor projects there will be more than 1.2 million job openings in the collision, automotive, motorcycle and marine industries.

If this sounds like a boon for our economy, it is. But there is also a challenge: filling the pipeline with enough skilled technicians to keep Arizona and the nation running.

There is a serious shortage of skilled technical workers. Career technical education is the path to these jobs and should be considered as a viable option for today's youth. This is important, considering that more than half of job openings in Arizona will require technical skills. Today, jobs that require education beyond high school, but less than a bachelor's degree, account for 53 percent of Arizona's labor market, nearly 5 percent higher than the national average. Yet just 47 percent of the state's workers have the training they need to fill these jobs, according to the National Skills Coalition.

CTE is often misunderstood or overlooked, instead of being lauded as an opportunity for students to hone their hands-on talents that open doors to lifelong careers. What many people do not know is that principles of science, technology, engineering and math are essential parts of CTE curriculum. How else would transportation technicians be able to gain the knowledge in a world where vehicles drive themselves and their interactive systems allow diagnostics and repairs from remote locations?

Technical schools offer practical, high-tech and industry-specific training. These types of schools tend to specialize in a particular area allowing them to deliver training at a higher level than schools offering many different educational programs. Specialization paired with industry relationships can lead to a better-prepared technician. Best of all, these schools' workplace-oriented curricula can lead to stable, well-paying careers in rapidly evolving industries.

In the case of transportation, the number of technologically advanced cars, trucks and motorcycles on the road are increasing, while the pool of technicians who can maintain, diagnose and repair them is not. Locally and nationally, we need electricians, welders, machinists and industrial engineers, too, as well as other highly skilled workers to maintain and service the machines and technologies that run our businesses, homes and the basic infrastructure of our country. Without enough workers in these technical professions, our nation could be on the precipice of a crisis.

That's why, more than ever before, we need to encourage this generation of students to reach high while challenging ourselves to look at education and career opportunities differently. CTE should not be treated as the second choice to a four-year degree, but instead as a worthwhile pathway to success, and an important contributor to our workforce and economy.

Union files initiative to cap hospital executives' pay

rachel.leingang@azcapitoltimes.com

The health care arm of the Service Employees International Union wants to ask Arizona voters to cap “exorbitant” salaries for executives at area hospitals.

SEIU-United Healthcare Workers West filed a ballot initiative with the Secretary of State’s Office on Feb. 12.

The Hospital Executive Compensation Act would cap both nonprofit and for-profit hospital executive compensation, including bonuses and other benefits like housing or transportation, at the salary of the President of the United States, which is currently $450,000.

If a hospital exceeds the $450,000 cap, it must publicly report on its website which executives go over the allowed salary, according to the initiative. It also gives the Attorney General’s Office jurisdiction to enforce the measure, and says a penalty of violating the proposed law would be to put sanctions in place or to revoke a hospital’s license to operate.

Sean Wherley, a spokesman for SEIU-United Healthcare Workers West, said the reasoning behind the ballot initiative is simple.

“Hospital executives are paid exorbitant salaries, often millions of dollars a year in money that should be going to

“The vast majority of people don’t think these salaries are reasonable for running any hospital that is supposed to be dedicated to serving the community, but especially those that are non-profit charities.”

— Sean Wherley, a spokesman for SEIU-United Healthcare Workers West direct patient care. ... The vast majority of people don’t think these salaries are reasonable for running any hospital that is supposed to be dedicated to serving the community, but especially those that are non-profit charities,” Wherley said in an emailed response to questions.

Wherley cited 16 executives at Arizona hospitals with compensation packages above $1 million, including seven executives at Banner Health, four at Phoenix Children’s Hospital and four in the HonorHealth system.

The measure reported a $37,250 donation from SEIU on Feb. 24, and the Secretary of State’s Office shows the measure has hired 27 paid petition circulators so far.

In the 2014 election cycle, backers of a similar measure gathered enough signatures to get onto the ballot in California, but SEIU didn’t file the signatures after a last-minute agreement with the California Hospital Association “to deal with the issue of excessive compensation, as well as some other issues,” Wherley said.

The group is again gathering signatures for a similar initiative in California for the 2016 election cycle because “the hospital industry failed to live up to its commitments in that agreement,” he said.

The ballot initiative “follows the precedent set by other issues such as raising the minimum wage, which dictates how much a private business must pay its employees,” Wherley said.

Since hospitals are licensed by the state, they have to follow a “wide range of regulations that protect patient safety and ensure the efficient use of public and private funds,” he said.

Arizona Hospital and Healthcare Association spokesman Matt Benson said the group is aware of the initiative and will be monitoring it, but the board of directors hasn’t taken a position yet since it’s still early in the signature-gathering process.

“Suffice it to say, the idea of limiting private earnings and achievement seems very contrary to the American way,” Benson said.

Garrick Taylor, the Arizona Chamber of Commerce and Industry’s spokesman, said he expects the chamber would “view something like this with a pretty healthy dose of skepticism.”

The chamber’s board will review the initiative if it moves further along and decide if it will weigh in, he said.

“We don’t typically look to labor unions for inspiration on how private sector entities should compensate their employees,” Taylor said.

The measure would need to collect 150,642 valid signatures by July 7 to qualify for the 2016 ballot. ☐

Outpouring of criticism puts voucher expansion on life support

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

Legislation to let every child attend private and parochial schools on the public dime is on life support, and possibly dead — at least in its current form.

Rep. Justin Olson, R-Mesa, conceded on Feb. 29 he lacks sufficient votes for final approval of HB2482. Several Republicans are refusing to go along with the proposal to remove virtually all barriers to youngsters getting such funding.

So Olson is now offering to make significant changes to round up votes. That includes keeping in place, at least until 2025, a cap that limits limit how many youngsters are eligible to take tax dollars for a private education.

But all that would do is postpone a wide-open voucher plan another few years. And even that may not be enough to push the measure over the top.

“I have received an outpouring of constituent communications that express concern over this legislation,” said Rep. Heather Carter, R-Cave Creek. She will not support the legislation.

And Rep. Doug Coleman, R-Apache Junction, said he does not accept the arguments by proponents that giving parents money to send their children to private and parochial schools saves money for the state.

Olson has another problem: Timing.

His push for vouchers comes as Gov. Doug Ducey is pushing voters to approve taking $3.5 billion from an education trust fund account to restore aid cut in prior years from public schools. And Rep. Karen Fann, R-Prescott, said giving more tax dollars to parents to send their children to private schools just ahead of that sends a bad message ahead of the May 17 special election.

“This is not the year to do it,” said Fann, “We have many more important things to do, like getting (Proposition) 123 through.”

The governor has not taken a position on the voucher legislation. But even Ducey press aide Daniel Scarpinato said his boss is concerned about anything that diverts attention from — or potentially takes votes away — from his pet project.

“The governor has made it very clear that the thing he’s focused on every day is the effort that’s on the ballot,” Scarpinato told Capitol Media Services. “It’s his top priority.”

The fight is over what proponents call “empowerment scholarship accounts.”

Originally approved in 2011, they were designed especially for parents whose children have special needs that could not be met in public schools. The law also has a cap of no more than one-half percent of all children in public schools, a figure that currently comes out to about 5,500 students.

Since then, legislators have repeatedly expanded the plan. For example, it now covers all students enrolled in schools rated D or F. And children on reservations now are automatically eligible.

HB2482, awaiting a House vote, would phase out any limits, to the point that any child in public schools in 2020 — there are 1.1 million today — could get a voucher.

Olson, however, said this “is not going to be a significant change.”

He pointed out Arizona already has open enrollment, with students able to attend any public school that has space for them. Students also can attend charter schools which under Arizona law can be operated by both nonprofit and for-profit corporations.

The difference, though, is that all these are public schools that cannot pick and choose among applicants and cannot charge parents anything beyond what the state pays. And vouchers can be used at private and parochial schools that are not subject to state regulations, can include religious instruction and can charge parents more than the vouchers provide.

Coleman said the idea behind vouchers made sense at one time.

“When it started, it was intended to aid those who perhaps the public schools were not servicing,” he said, meaning children who were not flourishing in public schools, whether because of certain learning disabilities of physical infirmities.

“Expanding it to everyone at this point is problematic,” Coleman said. “It makes it far more difficult for school districts to budget, to know what their needs are going to be the following year.”

Olson, however, said he sees this in much simpler terms.

“School choice is right,” he said.

That, however, still leaves the timing problem.

Approval of Proposition 123 would settle a lawsuit brought by schools and education groups charging that lawmakers had illegally ignored a 2000 voter-approved requirement to increase state aid to schools each year to account for inflation.

The Arizona Supreme Court already has ruled lawmakers broke the law. The amount actually owed was still being debated in courts when Ducey proposed tapping the trust fund.

But none of that will happen unless voters approve the measure, something that could be endangered by the voucher plan.

“It’s the wrong year to do it,” said Rep. T.J. Shope, R-Coolidge.

Andrew Morrill, president of the Arizona Education Association, said his organization will honor its commitment to support Proposition 123 even if lawmakers approve vouchers. But Morrill said that approving a voucher plan likely would temper the enthusiasm for teachers to go door to door to get people to the polls. ☐

Ducey takes preemptive strike on 'sharing economy' regulation

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

Rather than wait for the next regulatory fight over a "sharing economy" business to erupt somewhere in Arizona, Gov. Doug Ducey wants to make sure cities, counties and the state can't regulate them at all – at least not without the Legislature's permission.

Ducey is launching a preemptive strike at prospective future regulations on sharing economy businesses, such as Uber and Airbnb, with SB1524. The bill has two core provisions.

The first states that government entities and subdivisions can't impose regulations on businesses that provide a "digital platform" for individuals to offer goods or services to each other in the same way they would regulate businesses that provide goods and services directly to customers. The legislation would prohibit the state or its political subdivisions from regulating, for example, Airbnb, an online service in which people rent out rooms in their homes, as if it were a hotel service, or from regulating Uber as if it were a taxi company.

"We live in a free country and we have a free-market economy. So why are we putting laws out there to stop businesses before they even start?" Ducey said. "Why are we taking regulations that were written decades ago for another industry and applying them to businesses like this?"

The second part of the bill curtails government's ability to "increase regulatory burdens on a person" without express legal authority. The only exception it leaves is situations where there is a "critical or urgent need" that hasn't otherwise been addressed

SB1524

PURPOSE: Limits regulatory restrictions a municipality, county or state agency may place on an individual or business.

PROVISIONS

1. Prohibits a municipality, county or agency from an action that increases the regulatory burdens on a person, if is not specifically authorized by statute, unless there is a critical or urgent need that has not been addressed by legislation or self-regulation within the proposed regulated field.
2. Stipulates, unless specifically authorized by statute, ordinance or code a municipality, county or agency may not impose a regulation on a business that provides a digital platform for individuals to offer or procure goods and services, if the regulation is designed to regulate a business that provides goods or services directly to the customer.

by legislation or "self-regulation" by the industry in question.

Sen. Steve Smith, the bill's sponsor, used the recent battle over ride-sharing services like Uber and Lyft as an example of why SB1524 is needed. After legislation failed that would have exempted the companies from following the same regulations as taxis, the Department of Weights and Measures under then-Gov. Jan Brewer cracked down on them. Ducey subsequently loosened the reins after taking office in January 2015, and claimed he fired the weights and measures director due to overzealous regulation of the ride-sharing industry.

"Look what happened with Uber last year," said Smith, R-Maricopa. "The fight lasted a year and a half, almost two years."

Smith emphasized that the bill does not prohibit all regulations on sharing economy businesses. But it only leaves the door open for new regulations, not approved by the Legislature, in critical situations.

"Unless it's of some urgent nature that the Legislature didn't already touch on ... let's leave sleeping dogs lay, so to speak," Smith said. "If there is something that comes up, a critical need or urgent need that hasn't been addressed, then there's room in the bill to allow it."

The Uber fight is long over, and separate legislation is working its way through the Legislature that would address online lodging services like Airbnb. But Rene Guillen, a policy adviser to Ducey, said SB1524 will help smaller businesses that haven't yet become a household name, such as the services company Thumbtack, the delivery service Postmates, and sales company letgo, along with businesses that have not yet been created.

The bill is an outgrowth of Ducey's well-documented enthusiasm for the sharing economy and his State of the State pledge in January to "stop shackling innovation and instead put the cuffs on out-of-touch regulators."

"Arizona should be to the sharing economy what Texas is to oil and Silicon Valley used to be to the tech industry," Ducey said in his State of the State address.

Some, such as the League of Arizona Cities and Towns and the city of Prescott, raised early concerns about the bill's vagueness. The original version restricted the use of regulations intended for business-to-customer transactions to govern "a business that provides a mechanism for individuals to offer goods or services to each other or procure goods or services from each other."

The Governor's Office has ironed out some of the bill's kinks in an attempt to make it a bit less vague, pushing an amendment specifying that the legislation applies to companies that provide digital platforms for person-to-person transactions.

Despite the change, some concerns remain. Ken Strobeck, the league's executive director, questioned how the state would define "a business that provides goods or services directly to the customer," while Alison Zelms, Prescott's deputy city manager, said the bill is still too vague and expressed concerns that it could inadvertently affect city policies and activities.

The league is working with the Governor's Office, which Guillen said is open to additional technical changes if more clarification is needed.

"We're open to looking at that, as long as it preserves the intent of the original introduced legislation," he said.

Aside from the league's concerns, which it is discussing with the Governor's Office, the bill has aroused little opposition. Even a handful of Democrats backed the bill in the Senate, giving it some bipartisan support. ☐

Bill could prevent Planned Parenthood from providing Medicaid services

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

Slapped down in an earlier bid by federal judges, abortion foes at the Legislature are throwing up new roadblocks to Planned Parenthood being able to provide any services at all through the state's Medicaid program.

HB2599 would allow the Arizona Health Care Cost Containment System to exclude any organization that "failed to segregate taxpayer dollars from abortions." That would include not only direct expenses for doctors and other staff members but any of the overhead expenses of keeping the lights on.

The legislation passed by the House 35-24 on March 2 comes two years after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to give Arizona the go-ahead to cut off family planning funding to Planned Parenthood simply because the organization also provides abortions. The justices let stand lower court rulings that said singling out that organization for disparate treatment is illegal.

This new proposal by Rep. Justin Olson, R-Mesa, is a way to get around those rulings.

But Jodi Liggett, spokeswoman for Planned Parenthood Arizona, said this measure suffers from the same legal flaws. She said if it is signed into law it will meet the same legal fate — a fate that resulted in Arizona taxpayers shelling out $200,000 to pay Planned Parenthood's legal fees.

Arizona and federal laws already bar the use of public funds for abortions that are not medically necessary.

But the state, as part of its participation in the federal Medicaid program, provides family planning services for needy women. The federal government pays 90 percent, with the state covering the balance.

Medicaid statutes and regulations also permit eligible women to choose from any qualified provider, which has included Planned Parenthood.

In 2012, however, state legislators amended the law to say any organization that also provides abortions cannot be a "qualified provider." Olson, who sponsored that legislation, too, said any money the government gives Planned Parenthood to pay for other expenses frees up funds for abortions.

But that argument failed to convince federal judges.

Judge Marsha Berzon, writing for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, pointed out that the law says those enrolled in Medicaid, which includes AHCCCS, are allowed to get the services they need from any qualified provider. And Berzon said there is no evidence that Planned Parenthood medical staffers are not "qualified."

Olson said this new measure is legally distinguishable from that 2012 law. More to the point, he said it's justified.

"The overwhelming majority of voters agree that tax dollars should not fund abortion," he said.

"There's no guarantee that that's not occurring right now," Olson continued. "What this bill does is it creates a requirement that a provider of abortions segregate those dollars so that taxpayers have some certainty that their funds are not being used to fund an abortion."

Put simply, he said Planned Parenthood would not get family planning dollars unless it can show absolutely none of it helps underwrite the cost of elective abortions, even indirectly.

Liggett of Planned Parenthood said she believes the current charges her organization levies on each service properly allocate all direct and indirect costs. But she said HB2599 is set up to provide a pretext to cutting off Medicaid dollars no matter what evidence Planned Parenthood provides.

Part of the problem, Liggett said, is providing the absolute proof of the lack of cross-subsidization to the satisfaction of state officials who operate from a position of opposing abortion.

"Nobody can prove that," she said.

"Ask Banner Health if each of their hospitals can prove that they're not paying for all their air conditioning" from one particular procedure or another, she said. And Liggett said the fact remains that Planned Parenthood is a single corporation and pays its bills out of a single fund.

Olson, however, said he is not setting a trap.

"You can segregate those appropriately through accounting," he said.

"It's done in the corporate world in many different instances," Olson continued. "And I think the taxpayers are owed some certainty that their dollars are not funding something that they find abhorrent."

The federal appellate court ruling on Olson's last effort suggests he faces an uphill fight in attempting to declare that Planned Parenthood can be declared unqualified from Medicaid funding because it does not segregate its dollars.

In her ruling, appellate Judge Berzon said there are areas where an otherwise medically qualified physician or health-care provider can be determined to be unqualified. But she said that is limited to things like fraud, patient abuse, criminal activity and improper billing. ☐

Coalition of solar companies calls APS fee unconstitutional

rachel.leingang@azcapitoltimes.com

A group of solar companies wants to stop the state's largest utility from collecting a fee from its customers because the group claims the fee could be unconstitutional.

The Energy Freedom Coalition of America, a new group that includes solar company SolarCity and a few other solar companies, says Arizona Public Service shouldn't be able to automatically increase its lost fixed cost recovery adjuster mechanism.

All residential customers pay a small amount each month under the mechanism. It was approved in a 2012 APS rate case decision to allow the utility to recover fixed costs it loses due to energy efficiency and distributed generation programs, according to the utility's website.

Fixed costs include infrastructure needs, wires, substations and transformers.

APS has increased collections from the mechanism annually since its approval. In its first year, the utility collected about $5 million, followed by $25 million in its second and $39 million in its third. Starting in March 2016, it proposes to collect $46 million through the recovery mechanism.

For a typical residential customer, the charge amounts to 34 cents each month, according to APS filings.

The terms of the settlement agreement reached in the 2012 rate case decision allow APS to reset the mechanism annually. In filings last month, the coalition asks the Arizona Corporation Commission to issue a stay of the recovery mechanism pending an upcoming Arizona Supreme Court decision.

Last year, the Arizona Court of Appeals ruled a different adjuster mechanism, the system improvements benefit, was unconstitutional. In that case, the judges decided the benefit, which was used by water companies to increase rates between rate cases for infrastructure needs, didn't meet the Arizona Constitution's requirement for determining fair value when setting utility rates.

At the time of the ruling, the Residential Utility Consumer Office, which brought the case against the improvements benefit, said the court's decision could have "pretty broad implications."

"Certainly, there could be other mechanisms out there that could be in danger," RUCO Director David Tenney said at the time.

The commission asked the Supreme Court to review the case. Oral arguments are set for March 22.

The coalition wants the commission to hold off on increasing the recovery mechanism until the Supreme Court decides on the improvements benefit case.

The group also wants the commission to set up a process for what will happen to other adjusters if the Court of Appeals ruling is upheld.

Coalition attorney Court Rich argues the two mechanisms are "substantially similar," and that the court ruling "casts substantial doubt on the constitutionality of the LFCR (lost fixed cost recovery)."

In a filing on Feb. 24, the coalition also says the commission and APS could potentially see a lawsuit if they continue to seek an increase to the LFCR.

The group also argues APS could be made to refund the money it has collected from customers so far through the adjuster.

But, in a response to the coalition's filing, APS says the charges made by the coalition "reflect a profound misunderstanding of the LFCR, Arizona law and perhaps ratemaking itself."

Additionally, APS attorney Thomas Loquvam argues, the coalition shouldn't be allowed to intervene in the docket in the first place since the group wasn't a part of the settlement agreement, adding that APS would be "severely prejudiced" should the coalition be allowed to intervene.

Loquvam also said case law wouldn't allow for any sort of refund of any money collected through the mechanism since it was a properly authorized rate when approved.

The utility also says there are "vast qualitative differences" between the system improvements benefit and the lost fixed cost recovery mechanism. Loquvam said the best approach is to wait for the Supreme Court's decision.

In a response to APS, the coalition agrees that the best idea is to wait for the decision. In the meantime, the coalition says, the commission should stay APS's application to increase the LFCR. If the Court of Appeals ruling is upheld, the LFCR increase should be denied, the coalition says. The group also wants the commission to set up a meeting to decide what the procedure would be to analyze the adjuster if the Court of Appeals ruling stands.

"To act otherwise is to risk engaging in action with notice that such action may be unconstitutional," Rich wrote.

An administrative law judge with the commission will have to decide whether the coalition can intervene in the matter. ☐

During debate in the House, Democrats lined up in opposition to the bill's provisions, mostly zeroing in on people who would get dropped from the program and the cost of implementing the photo ID.

Rep. Charlene Fernandez, D-Yuma, noted how the bill would affect her district in Yuma County, which has one of the nation's highest unemployment rates. In August 2015, unemployment reached 27 percent in the Yuma area, and preliminary numbers from December show an 18 percent unemployment rate, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

She also noted that if some kids are dropped from SNAP benefits, it may affect how or if they qualify for free and reduced lunch programs at schools.

"Those kids would be losing that lunch and breakfast. What happens when kids go to school hungry? They can't learn. ... How is this a hand up if we start cutting these kids from something as basic as a breakfast and a lunch?" Fernandez said.

Rep. Celeste Plumlee, D-Tempe, told about how, while she was in school getting her undergraduate degree and working full-time, she got a 50-cent raise in pay from $12 to $12.50, which made her ineligible for some of the benefits she was receiving.

"When I lost those benefits, I did not suddenly become a more responsible member of society. ... I simply became a mother who could no longer afford to adequately feed her children," she said.

While voting against the bill, Rep. Lela Alston, D-Phoenix, said, "This is the first time I have ever heard of the economic theory that the path to prosperity and self-reliance and well-being and money was achieved through starvation."

Service organizations pointed out that, even if the EBT card has a photo on it, the benefits go to an entire household. For instance, a child could use his/her parent's EBT card to buy groceries, despite someone else's photo being on the card.

Olson admitted during the House Committee of the Whole that, according to federal law, a business can't refuse to take an EBT card as long as the person has the proper PIN, even if the photo doesn't match the person who's using the card.

But, he said, he's trying to crack down on a "secondary market" for the benefit cards by adding the photo. He directed people to turn to Craigslist to find people selling EBT cards illegally.

A Craigslist search on Feb. 29 turned up a handful of results for people selling food stamps. "I have 400 on my EBT card my car broke today and am trading $200 for the $400 on my card," one ad read.

In the House Appropriations Committee on Feb. 17, Gibson McKay, a lobbyist for Foundation for Government Accountability Action, which is backing the bill, said there's anecdotal evidence across the country of EBT cards being seen in drug busts or crack houses, possibly indicating people are trading the cards for drugs.

DES already has a robust fraud investigation program, and 99.9 percent of people who receive welfare follow the law, said Angie Rodgers, president of the Association of Arizona Food Banks, which opposes the bill.

"Are we sacrificing the good for the perfect to make this bill go forward? Are we trying to grab that last .1 percent? ... Or are we trying to implement a program that works well and feeds more than a half-million children every month?" Rodgers told the Arizona Capitol Times.

As for the remaining provisions, Rodgers said she's not aware of people using SNAP benefits on a cruise ship or the other circumstances the bill bans, and she doesn't see fraud within the welfare system as a rampant issue.

"We're encouraged that the sponsor recognizes that those provisions (that would have dropped people from SNAP) aren't necessary, and we hope he comes to the realization that the entire bill is unnecessary," Rodgers said.

Sam Richard, executive director of Protecting Arizona's Family Coalition, said it's a "false pretense" that there's a ton of fraud in the welfare system. He said DES is already catching the right people with its fraud detection unit, and there's no evidence that people are using benefits at places like tattoo parlors, cruise ships or nail salons.

"The number one thing that individuals use SNAP dollars for is food. ... You're not going out to buy large screen TVs and Cadillacs with this money. This money is for food," Richard said.

The bill now moves to the Senate. ☐

Some Arizona tribal casinos wage bets on risky demographic: millennials

LAUREN CLARK
Cronkite News

Philip Smith remembers the sights, sounds and smells of the last time he went gambling.

"I was with my brother, and we were having a great time playing roulette and blackjack with all these different kinds of people," the 33-year-old Phoenix resident said. "It's actually really funny seeing the different types of personalities that come out when others play, especially when they are losing."

He said he remembers the thick fog of smoke and the dings of the machines surrounding him in the Las Vegas casino.

As much as he enjoyed the experience, there's one part of the casino he avoided.

"I hate slots," said Smith, who attends Arizona State University. "It's all up to luck. It's boring, and I can't control what happens. The only time I would ever even consider playing is to pretend I am so I could score free drinks."

Smith's opinions are indicative of a trend gaming experts and casino owners alike have noticed: The same attractions that once lured generations into gaming no longer work for this younger crowd. Slot machines – even casinos as a whole – aren't enticing enough for the 18-to-34-year-old age group known as millennials.

It's a subject so pressing to tribal casinos, organizers devoted a panel to discuss how to attract (and keep) millennials at last month's Arizona Indian Gaming Association Expo at the Talking Stick Resort adjacent to Scottsdale.

Tribal governments nationwide are revamping their casino floors and expanding visitors' entertainment options beyond gambling. And they're keeping millennials in mind.

Although gaming revenue has grown over the years, experts recognize the power of millennials, who are now larger as a group than baby boomers, according to the Marketing Research Association. The association estimated that millennials will account for one-third of all retail spending within the next five years.

The current hand: Tribal gaming has 'immeasurable' impact

The tribal gaming industry generated $28.5 billion nationally in 2014. And in Arizona, the state's 23 casino operations brought in about $2.5 billion, according to the Arizona Indian Gaming Association.

Gaming provided 15,000 people with jobs in Arizona as well, according to the association.

The state only allows casinos on Native American reservations. In 1988, the United States passed the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which made casinos legal on tribal land.

Valerie Spicer, the executive director of the Arizona Indian Gaming Association, said a lot of good has come since.

"It's probably the single most economic phenomenon happening to tribes. It's unparalleled in socio-economic impact," Spicer said, adding that a portion of the revenue goes toward funding roads, schools and programs on reservations.

"We are also seeing a higher number of kids on the reservation seeking higher education," Spicer said. "The impact has been immeasurable."

The bet: Can casinos attract younger audiences?

Experts worry that the preferences of millennials could disrupt the industry.

Millennials have spent their lives attached to social media and have access to instant information on the Internet, said Robert Coppola, director of global research and consumer insights at YWS Design & Architecture. They want constant interaction and transparency, which puts slot machines in jeopardy.

That's a problem, experts said. Slot machines make up about 65 percent of an average casino's revenue, according to John Grochowski, an author and the gambling columnist at the Chicago Sun-Times.

During the expo panel, Coppola said slot machines don't provide "social experience," lack transparency and have a low skill level.

"Slots will have to change, and I personally do not think that they will exist in this form for the future," he said.

Jason "Wolf" Rosenberg, the vice president of marketing at online gaming at WhiteSand, an online gaming company and adviser to many casinos, said during the panel that casinos must change course.

"Young people are looking for 'Instagrammable' moments," he said. "Sitting at a slot machine is not one of them."

One idea for slots is to change their appearance completely to something that resembles more of a video game.

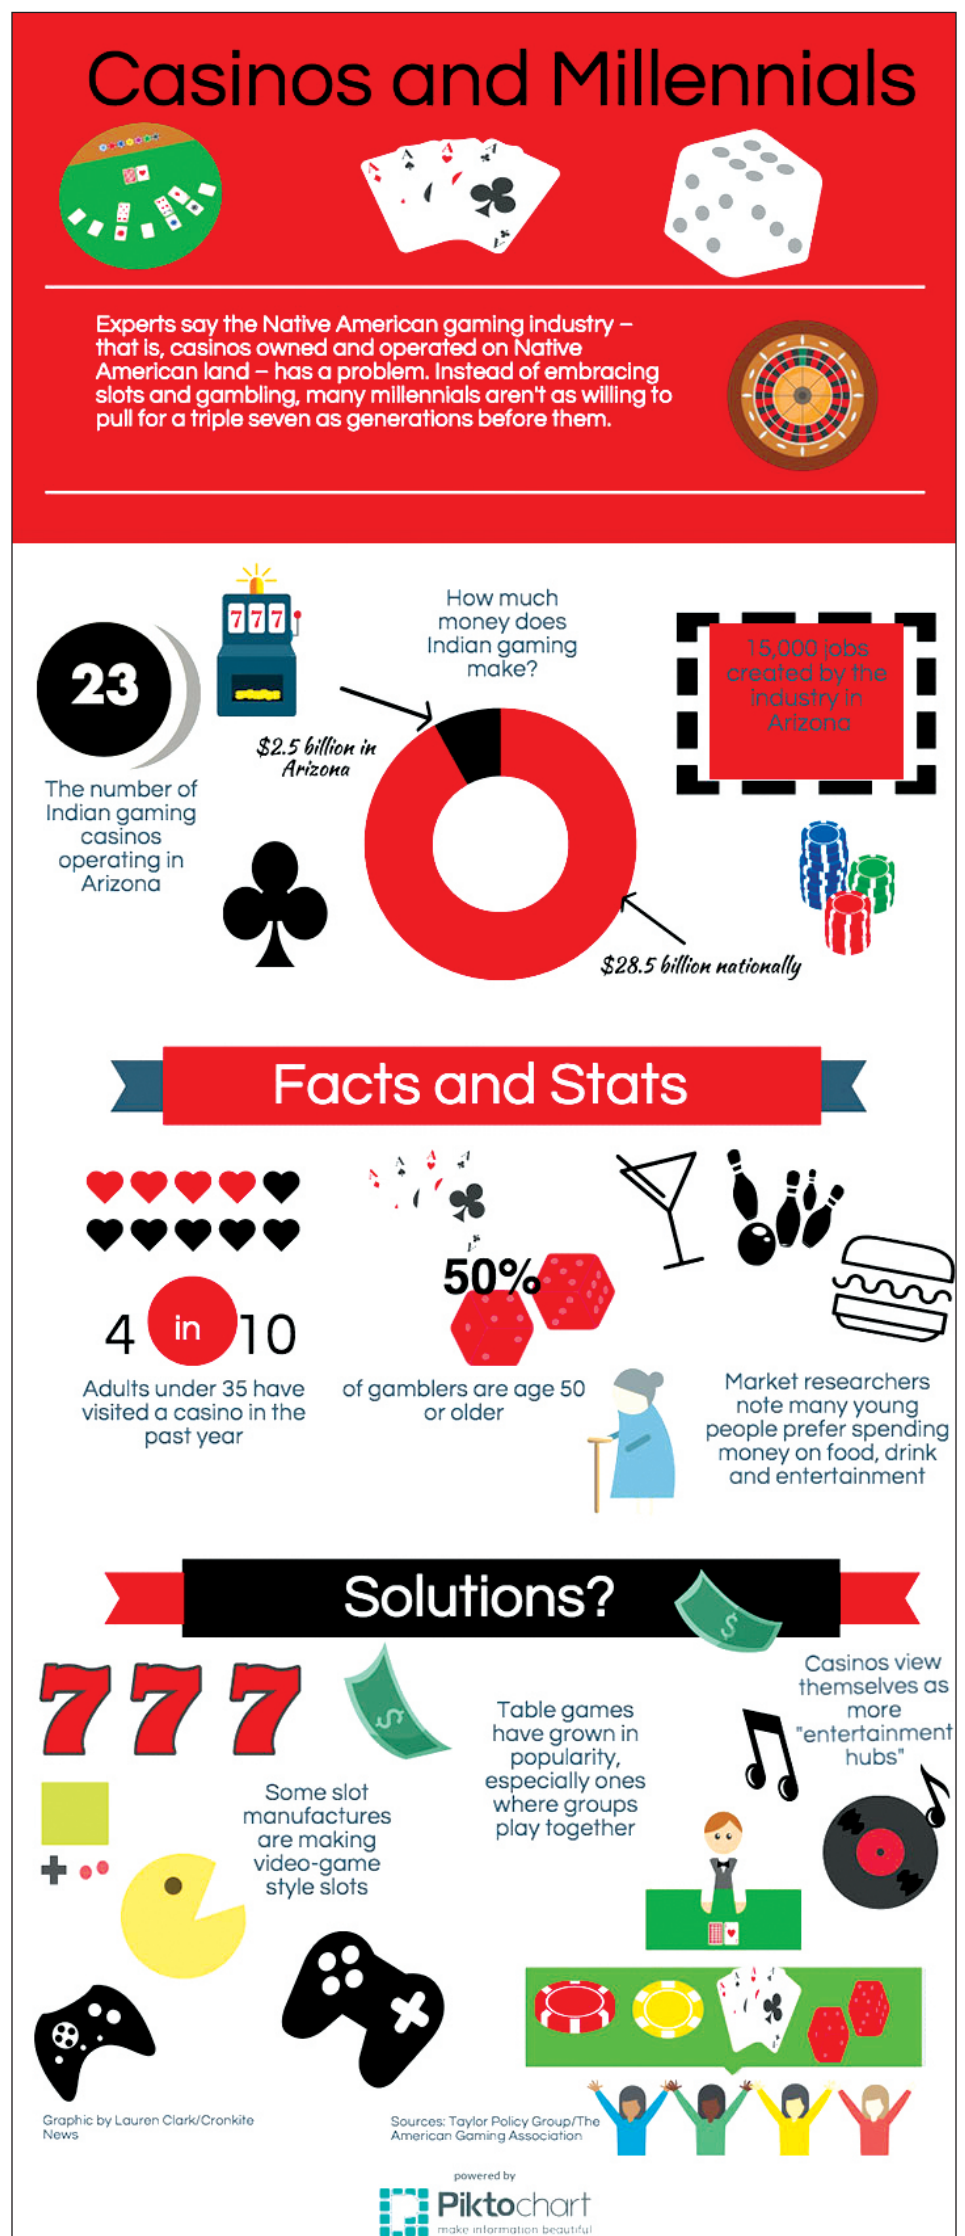

"Keep in mind, these people have had 100 percent of their life exposed to a digital platform," said David Hielscher, assistant director of marketing at Casino Arizona and Talking Stick Resort. "That means we have to completely reinvent a slot machine's operations to look more like video games these young adults are used to playing."

Some machine manufacturers have responded to this challenge, revamping arcade characters such as Pac-Man for an interactive betting experience and even designing a beer pong game where users can double up in teams to win money. Machines also mimic video games' tendency to award players – with things like free spins and small cash prizes – to get them hooked for a longer time.

But many millennials like Smith said they are more attracted to table games, such as roulette, blackjack and craps, because of their interactive nature.

Bobby Jones, the vice president of sales and marketing at California-based Score Gaming, said his company has found a way to engage the younger audience in gambling.

"We realized we needed to make a more social, creative table game," he said. "We wanted a unique interaction, where (young people) would encourage each other to make a particular move or bet. And we have seen a turn of the tide, and a tremendous comeback."

Two of their most popular games with the younger audience include group table games that allow friends to team up against the dealer – Throw One Back and Three Card 21 "N" Done.

State legislatures see flurry of daily fantasy sports bills

PHILIP MARCELO
Associated Press

The daily fantasy sports debate has spilled into state capitols nationwide, with nearly 30 legislatures including Arizona's considering proposals to regulate, ban or affirm the games played by millions of Americans.

The flurry of recent legislative activity represents a sea change for the industry, which for years was content to operate largely unregulated.

"We've been operating in this gray area for a long time, and, up until now, it hasn't really been a problem," said Peter Schoenke, chairman of the Fantasy Sports Trade Association, which hired about 65 lobbying firms in 44 states to push bills favorable to the industry. "What we want to do in all of these states is to clarify that it is legal."

A 2006 federal law banned online gambling but specifically exempted fantasy sports, paving the way for the creation of the niche industry that's since exploded in popularity, prompting policymakers to take a closer look.

Companies like Boston's DraftKings and New York's FanDuel have argued their contests aren't gambling because the games require more skill than luck. But where it once shied away from heavy oversight, the industry is now embracing limited regulation, so long as it isn't subjected to the same exacting standards as traditional gambling operations.

"The laws of skill gaming and gambling were written like a hundred years ago and they don't really fit fantasy sports," Schoenke said.

This year's tally of 30 states with pending bills is up from roughly 16 states last year and two in 2014, according to GamblingCompliance Research Services, which has been tracking the legislation.

In Arizona, state lawmakers have been moving to spell out that the "fantasy sports" leagues being advertised heavily on TV — and the wagering around them — are legal even as prosecutors in some other states are trying to close them down.

Current Arizona law makes it illegal to spend money to participate in any game or contest of chance of skill. That includes betting on the outcome of a future event.

SB1515 would specifically exclude "fantasy sports league competitions."

But Kelsey Lundy, who lobbies for the Fantasy Sports Trade Association, insisted that the legislation her group is pushing does not, in fact, legalize anything. Instead, she told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee this simply seeks to clarify the law.

That, however, is not the conclusion of Attorney General Mark Brnovich.

In a letter to the chief executive of DraftKings, Brnovich noted the company is soliciting players nationwide. But in the letter, obtained by Capitol Media Services, Brnovich told Jason Robins that DraftKings is apparently failing to warn Arizonans that they would be breaking the law by Lundy said Arizonans have been participating in online fantasy leagues since the early 1990s. The problem, she said, is state law spells out exceptions from its ban on gambling, ranging from bingo nights at churches to the games of skill at places like Dave and Buster's.

"But the law is silent on fantasy sports in Arizona which has created this legal gray zone that my client would like to clarify," Lundy said.

The 'poison pill'

That contention that fantasy sports always has been legal is crucial to what happens even if the measure is approved by the Legislature and signed by the governor.

In 2002 the state signed a deal giving Indian tribes the exclusive right to operate certain kinds of gambling. That compact includes limits on types of gaming, the number of casinos and the number of machines.

More significant, that deal says if the state expands the kinds of gaming allowed off reservation it triggers a "poison pill" in that compact that eliminates any limits on what the tribes can do. And that also would absolve the tribes of any further obligation to share profits with the state.

Gaming interests crafted the legislation to have a specific legislative finding that the competitions have been in Arizona since the 1990s, "providing business and fan opportunities."

"The Legislature has never considered fantasy sports league competitions to be a form of gambling," reads the language approved by the committee.

But Valerie Spicer, executive director of the Indian Gaming Association of Arizona, said her members believe the law would trigger the "poison pill," even with the legislative disclaimer.

Proponents said they don't need to resolve that: The legislation contains language saying the law goes away if a court ultimately determines that it does, in fact, expand gaming in Arizona.

Spicer said by that point, it will be too late. She said simply approving the law — even if can be voided later — triggers the provision.

And she derided the premise of the measure and its wording.

"Simply stating that it is not gambling doesn't mean that it's not gambling," Spicer said, pointing out actions taking place across the nation by attorneys general in other states to review the issue, a review she said is likely to end the daily fantasy sports operations.

That's the conclusion that Brnovich already has reached.

"Participation in your games for monetary winnings violates Arizona law," he wrote to Robins.

In this Dec. 1, 2015, file photo, an ad for daily fantasy sports operator DraftKings is displayed in a subway station in Philadelphia. The daily fantasy sports debate has spilled into state capitols nationwide, with nearly 30 legislatures considering proposals to regulate, ban or affirm the games played by millions of Americans.

And even if Arizona cannot shut down DraftKings, Brnovich warned Robins his firm could be in violation of the state's Consumer Fraud Act for failing to warn Arizona consumers "that they are ineligible to play for monetary winnings."

Gambling exemptions

Around the country, at least half the bills represent variations of an industry-backed proposal exempting the games from state gambling regulations and imposing requirements meant to protect consumers, according to an Associated Press review.

Among them is a Virginia bill that's the first headed to the governor for approval this year, following passage by the legislature last week.

About 14 states are weighing bills requiring a player be at least 18 years old. California and Maryland are considering bills with a minimum age of 21, as is Massachusetts through a rule-making initiative taking place outside the legislative process.

Most bills filed so far seek to impose licensing and registration fees on fantasy sports companies.

The payments range from a one-time, $2,500 fee proposed in Oklahoma to a one-time fee of up to $500,000 plus an annual renewal fee of up to $100,000 called for in a Florida bill.

At least two states — California and New York — have proposals to tax revenues from games.

"We feel strongly that there ought to be some revenues to help offset any negative consequences," said California Rep. Adam Gray, the Democrat who submitted the proposal. "There are legitimate concerns that gambling and other gaming activities create significant personal challenges for people."

In terms of oversight, the industry-backed bills generally call for companies to hire a third party to conduct a compliance audit, which is then reviewed by the state attorney general.

At least two states — Indiana and Maryland — are considering bills placing oversight directly in the hands of state agencies that regulate gambling, horse racing and lotteries.

Two others — Massachusetts and Rhode Island — are weighing bills that simply authorize their state lotteries to develop fantasy sports games but steer clear of the regulatory debate.

Industry watchers are concerned that some of the bills are still too vague.

Chris Grove, editor of the Legal Sports Report, a Nevada-based publication, said the definition of "fantasy contests" used in many of the industry-backed bills doesn't specifically limit competitions to sports. Fantasy contests based on award shows, political debates, even spelling bees could theoretically be permissible, he says.

"The broader and vaguer the definition, the more likely it becomes that operators will push the limits of that definition," Grove wrote in a recent analysis.

Schoenke, of the trade association, says the industry isn't opposed to bills refining that language, as some lawmakers have already done.

"The intent of my legislation is to define daily fantasy contests as those involving sports," said Illinois Rep. Michael Zalewski, a Democrat who introduced a version of the industry bill that includes the "fantasy contests" definition in question. "I'm confident through corrective drafting and legislative intent, we can address concerns addressed."

Advocates for problem gamblers, meanwhile, are concerned the bills don't go far enough to protect consumers.

"They're absolutely inadequate," says Keith Whyte, head of the National Council on Problem Gambling. "Regulating fantasy sports without decent minimum standards will exacerbate gambling addiction problems."

The industry-backed bill, introduced in many states as the "Fantasy Contests Act," requires companies to verify players are 18 or older, ban employees and their relatives from competing in cash contests, allow players with gambling problems to limit or restrict their play and segregate player funds from the company's operational funds, among other things.

The National Council on Problem Gambling suggests lawmakers impose more stringent age verification measures and require operators to prominently post gambling addiction resources on their websites.

Schoenke says the industry is open to more specific legislative requirements. DraftKings and FanDuel say they already use a multistep process to verify the age and location of players, post gambling addiction information online and allow players to limit their play.

It's too early to say which bills will ultimately pass, but Jeremy Kudon, a New York-based lawyer coordinating the trade association's lobbying effort, says up to eight states could pass legislation favorable to the industry. Most, he acknowledges, will take years of work.

"Passing legislation is like getting into the Hall of Fame," Kudon says. "Very few are first ballot Hall of Famers." ■

Glendale casino's liquor license on hold pending public hearing

SYDNEY GREENE

sydney.greene@azcapitoltimes.com

The Desert Diamond Casino in Glendale has been the source of controversy for the past couple of years, but after opening in December, it faces another hurdle – obtaining a liquor license.

The Department of Liquor Licenses & Control reported that the casino submitted a liquor license application for the business on July 6. Since the casino is classified as a bar, the licensing process usually takes 105 days, which means the casino should have received an answer by Oct. 19. But that did not happen. The department said opposition to the request resulted in a public hearing by the State Liquor Board.

Michael Rosenberger, deputy director of the Department of Liquor Licenses & Control, said it is unable to comment on the status of the licensing process, but said everything is going according to proper procedures.

“We do not comment substantively on on-going investigations,” Rosenberger wrote. “We treat every application on its own merits and we conduct some level of investigation for every applicant depending upon the type of license being sought.”

Rosenberger said the 105-day time frame can be extended at the discretion of the board's director.

“The director has the authority under the law to extend the timeline beyond 105 days if necessary, up to one year. This matter has required the extra time,” Rosenberger wrote. “We are working closely with representatives of the casino to obtain all of the information we require so we can make the appropriate decision as to whether the department will protest the application. As there are public protests lodged, the matter will go before the State Liquor Board regardless of whether the department also protests.”

Casinos and millennials

Score Gaming is creating new games each year to see what will resonate with the millennial audience. But in the end, Jones said gambling may not attract as many millennials as the industry hopes.

“Honestly, I don't think we will get the lion's share of millennials. But we will get a reasonable dent in gaming and attract some,” Jones said. “The industry has changed dramatically, and the glory days are gone. ... Gaming is becoming a smaller portion of that piece of the pie. Younger folks would rather spend money having a good time with a group of friends with the flashing lights and music.”

Additionally, moving to a millennial-based casino too quickly could pose a risk.

As many baby boomers – those between ages 51 and 69 – retire, some may turn to gambling as a means of entertainment. According to the National Council of Problem Gambling, half of all gamblers are over age 50. And many in this demographic love the traditional layout of the casino with the slots, Spicer said.

“You have people who are very loyal customers,” she said. “And casinos have to balance between keeping that retention and incremental growth. You have to serve both populations, and you don't want to upset that balance.”

Shuffling the deck: How casinos are adapting to millennials

Some casinos have changed their game plan: They treat their businesses as entertainment hubs instead of gaming centers.

Talking Stick Resort and Casino near Scottsdale heavily markets its summer pool parties offering bottle service, DJ's and cabanas. The casino has pulled thousands of young people into its establishment during the summer.

“We see around 2,500 people on Saturday and Sunday for our pool parties. These kids have money to spend, and they will spend it,” Hielscher said. “They need to be socially integrated. These are social animals we are talking about.”

Talking Stick Resort also has Degree 270, a dance club on the resort's 14th floor that is the tallest of all the clubs in Scottsdale, Hielscher said. It also hosts a weekly trivia night for young people to compete in teams.

Near Tucson, the Casino del Sol Resort uses a wide variety of entertainment options to wrangle up a younger crowd. The casino has hosted concerts such as Christina Perri or Fall Out Boy and offers Cosmic Bingo – described as cosmic bowling with an “exuberant” host and plenty of alcohol.

“If a millennial wants to try some social gaming, play poker, grab a gourmet meal, maybe visit the spa and head out to a show or drinks and dancing, they can do that,” Steven Neely, chief marketing officer of Casino del Sol, said via email. “And, of course, while they are here, they can tell all of their friends about it through the many ‘selfie spots’ we have identified for them around the property.”

Rosenberg agreed that millennials seem to like the other options.

“We are seeing a vast amount of disposable income being used at pools, clubs and high-price entry into a club,” Rosenberg said. “The formula of trapping them in a casino is being abandoned.”

As some experts say a dollar is a dollar in any gambling establishment – whether millennials spend it on food, drinks gambling or entertainment.

But regardless of the casinos' future direction, Smith said having a good and an entertaining experience is all that matters.

“If I'm having fun anywhere, I would go back,” he said.

Canine comfort

Mary Picard, a victim's advocate who works on family violence cases, is Tori's handler. The dog lives with her.

Picard said the office's K9 Victim Support Unit was one of the first in the nation.

Tori is trained as a service dog, knowing 90 commands, but the organization that trained her thought she would be perfect for the County Attorney's Office because of her calm demeanor.

She also senses when a person is troubled and stressed, Picard said.

"A lot of times she'll lay on the victim's feet as a way to comfort them," Picard said.

Picard said the dogs typically stay in the pews in sight of the witness during testimony, although they will sit at the witness stand in extreme cases.

The dogs are with the child during trial-preparation interviews with prosecutors, and when it comes time to testify will accompany them to the courtroom.

Picard said courtrooms have waiting rooms for witnesses, which is where the child and dog hang out together before the moment of truth.

Teenage girls who have been molested tend to develop especially strong bonds with Tori, Picard said.

"I had a teenager about a month ago who sat on the floor cross-legged and stayed in the victim room and just petted her until it was her time to testify," Picard said. "And then when she came out she did the same thing when she was done – sat on the floor with Tori and just kind of held her."

SYMPATHY FOR THE VICTIM

Mitchell said defense attorneys have objected in court to the use of the dogs.

"The defense is typically objecting because they think it will garner sympathy for the victim," Mitchell said.

While some judges have refused to allow the use of the dogs, she said, there aren't any written rulings or case law in Arizona.

Appellate courts in Washington state, California, and New York have upheld the use of the dogs in recent years, rejecting arguments that they violate a defendant's right to a fair trial and to confront witnesses.

The New York Supreme Court Appellate Division in a 2013 decision conceded that a dog engendered sympathy for the 15-year-old molestation victim in the eyes of the jury.

"[T]here was no indication that such sympathy was significantly greater than the normal human response to a child's testimony about her sexual abuse by an adult," the court wrote.

The ruling upheld Victor Tohom's conviction and sentence of 25 years to life in prison for molesting his teenaged daughter.

In the California case, the defense attorney argued that people have "very warm, loving, good feelings" about dogs, and jurors will translate those feelings to the child, leaving them unable to critically analyze whether the child is telling the truth.

The California Court of Appeals found that the trial judge went to great lengths to make the dog as unobtrusive as possible during the testimony of 11- and 13-year-old sisters who were molested by their father. And the judge gave the jury special instructions not to consider the dog's presence in weighing evidence.

A defense attorney in the Washington case told the trial judge he didn't mind the use of a dog during the victim's testimony if the defendant got to testify while holding his baby.

The 2014 Washington Supreme Court ruling involved a 56-year-old burglary victim who functioned at the level of a 6- to 12-year-old.

In upholding the defendant's conviction, the court ruled that it was the state's burden to prove the need for a dog to assist a vulnerable witness, not the defendant's to prove he would be harmed. ☐

Fail to reach agreement on prisoners' health care claims

gary.grado@azcapitoltimes.com

Attorneys came to an impasse March 1 in resolving claims the Department of Corrections is shirking its obligation under a year-old lawsuit settlement to improve health care for prisoners.

Attorneys for the state's roughly 35,000 prisoners and attorneys representing the department met with Magistrate Judge John Buttrick to settle claims by the prisoners that the state isn't meeting some of the requirements called for in the settlement agreement and isn't adequately meeting other requirements.

A federal judge signed off on an agreement in February 2015 requiring the department to meet up to 80 performance standards for handling medical issues. For example, the department has to meet staffing requirements, emergency response times, and ensure prisoners get their medications in a timely fashion.

The agreement also required the department to revamp its rules on solitary confinement for seriously mentally ill prisoners.

Prisoner attorneys documented a host of compliance issues and examples of medical horror stories in letters to attorneys representing the department.

Lucy Rand, an assistant attorney general, said in an Aug. 20 letter to prisoner lawyers their complaints were simply a series of "individualized complaints" obtained from prisoners without corroboration, and "vague allegations barren of any facts from unidentified sources."

Rand said in the letter the plaintiffs have a valid complaint only if the department "failed to substantially comply in some significant respect to the stipulation."

Andrew Wilder, a department spokesman, said anecdotal complaints aren't evidence of substantial non-compliance among a patient population of more than 35,000.

"We are confident that the court will agree when these issues are presented for judicial resolution," Wilder said.

Lawmakers appropriated $8 million in fiscal-year 2016 to meet the requirements. The lawsuit also cost the state $4.9 million in attorneys' fees to the plaintiffs.

Don Specter, an attorney with Prison Law Office, a public interest law firm in California representing the prisoners, said there were no substantive agreements in the latest meeting except to meet again in three weeks.

He said the prisoners will also file a motion in about three weeks asking the court to order the department to come up with a better medical staffing plan.

Specter said the department, which contracts with Corizon Correctional Healthcare, isn't meeting some of the agreed upon requirements at all while meeting others in an unreasonable way.

Specter said Corizon is also misinterpreting some performance measures.

Letters to the department from the prisoner attorneys provide a host of examples of alleged failures to comply, one of which is Corizon's interpretation of the word "denial."

The prisoners complained in an Oct. 15 letter that monitors for the department reported Corizon denied no referrals to specialists, but that's because the health care company refers to what amounts to a denial as "an alternate treatment plan."

Prisoner attorney David Fahti wrote in the letter that the "willful misinterpretation" of the word denial demonstrates bad faith.

"Simply put, defendants cannot nullify this requirement by using a different word," Fahti wrote.

Fahti also claims that wait times for nurses have increased since the February 2015 settlement agreement took effect. He also said there was a case in which detention officers told medical workers to stop life-saving measures three times on a prisoner who suffered a heart attack. ☐

Pay bill would exclude sick leave, health insurance, maternity leave

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

State lawmakers are moving to undermine the ability of cities to require employers to provide things like sick leave to local workers.

And they're doing it in a back-door way.

Legislation set for a House vote this week would leave undisturbed what businesses have finally conceded they cannot do: Preclude cities and counties from setting minimum wages higher than what the state requires. That's because the 2006 voter-approved minimum wage law specifically permits such local options.

Instead, HB2579 seeks to narrow the definition of exactly what are "wages" to include only the cash compensation paid.

More to the point, the legislation specifically says that certain things are not wages. That includes everything from fringe benefits like health insurance, sick pay, maternity leave and vacation pay.

Chianne Hewer, lobbyist for the Arizona Restaurant Association, acknowledged the move is to short-circuit any effort by any city to tell her members — or any other employer — that they have to provide any of that, as none of it is required under state law.

The concerns are more than academic.

Tucson City Council member Regina Romero has been pushing to adopt an ordinance to make sick leave part of a "working family agenda."

She contends that would help the working poor, especially mothers. Romero said about half the Tucson workforce does not have access to earned sick leave.

Romero's proposals have run into stiff opposition from members of the business community. But if HB2579 becomes law, they would no longer have to worry about what the council does.

The fight has its roots in the 2006 initiative pushed by the AFL-CIO and the United Food and Commercial Workers. It required employers to pay $6.75 an hour at a time when the federal minimum wage was just $5.15.

Voters approved it by a 2-1 margin.

The same law requires annual adjustments tied to inflation. The current state minimum is $8.05 an hour, compared to $7.25 at the federal level.

Fearful that some communities could push the figure even higher, businesses got the Republican-controlled Legislature to vote in 2013 to block such "living wage" laws. But Attorney General Mark Brnovich ruled that conflicts with language in the 2006 initiative — which lawmakers cannot alter — specifically allowing local options on wages.

This new measure seeks to get around that by narrowing the definition of what is a "wage."

At a hearing earlier this month, Hewer told lawmakers HB2579 simply is "clarifying" the 2013 law.

"There's a lot of confusion right now about what our language is, who's regulating it and what the difference is between the wage and something like maternity leave, a 401(k) package, paid time off," she said.

More to the point, Hewer said restaurants consider those "things they have to keep in their pocket to be competitive against that restaurant across the street."

Rep. Stefanie Mach, D-Tucson, said she sees no reason to override what cities decide is in the best interests of their residents. But Rep. Warren Petersen, R-Gilbert, had a different take.

"The role of government is to protect individual rights," he said, citing state constitutional provisions. "That is a clear component of this bill."

The only recorded vote to this point came in the House Commerce Committee, which approved the change on a party-line vote. It gained preliminary approval last week on a voice vote, setting the stage for a roll-call vote.

Rebekah Friend, executive director of the state AFL-CIO, said if the measure becomes law it likely will face a legal challenge.

"I don't think they can do it," she said.

Friend said she reads the voter-protected language of the 2006 ballot measure to preserve a local option for everything that was considered a "wage" at that time, the same language as currently exists. And it defines wages as including "sick pay, vacation pay, severance pay, commissions, bonuses and other amounts promised when the employer has a policy or a practice of making such payments."

Republican lawmakers are not the only ones trying to throw roadblocks in the path of local options on things like wages.

In his State of the State speech in January, Gov. Doug Ducey fired a salvo at cities that are considering adopting their own living wage requirements. He called such moves "trendy, feel-good policies that are stifling opportunity across the nation."

And the governor said he's prepared to do more than talk about it.

"I will use every constitutional power of the executive branch and leverage every legislative relationship to protect small businesses and the working men and women they employ," Ducey threatened. He said that would even include cutting state-share revenues for communities that adopt a minimum wage higher than Arizona law mandates.

Gubernatorial press aide Daniel Scarpinato said his boss' views on living wages extend to fringe benefits. Romero said it's wrong of Ducey to simply try to block the issue.

"Let's have a conversation on how we improve the lives of the working poor in our state," she said, rather than simply threatening cities with loss of state aid.

"I'm open to a conversation," Romero continued. "But I'm not open to just being shut out." ☐

Ducey will support Trump if he is Republican nominee

JEREMY DUDA
jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

As pressure ramps up nationally on Republicans to unify against Donald Trump's bid for the GOP presidential nomination, Gov. Doug Ducey said he'll support whichever candidate wins his party's nomination, including Trump.

When asked by reporters if he'd support Trump if the real estate mogul is the Republican nominee, Ducey tiptoed around the question and refused to provide a direct answer. But he affirmed that he would support the eventual GOP nominee.

"I'm looking forward to being supportive of the nominee, once that's been decided," Ducey told reporters on March 2, the day after Trump maintained his frontrunner status with seven-state wins on Super Tuesday. "The nominee hasn't been decided yet, but I'm going to support the nominee. I think what's important is that we defeat Hillary Clinton. I don't want to see another four or eight years of the policies of Barack Obama. That's very important to me."

Calls from within the Republican Party for its members to repudiate Trump have grown louder as he has dominated the race, winning GOP primaries in New Hampshire, South Carolina and Nevada in the run-up to Super Tuesday. Some, such as Republican U.S. Sen. Ben Sasse of Nebraska, have vowed that they won't vote for Trump if he wins the GOP nomination.

But when asked if he was willing to join the Republican "Stop Trump" movement,

Ducey said only, "Well no, I'm focused on the state of Arizona."

"I'm the governor. This is my day job. This is my top priority. And this is what I'm 100 percent focused on," he said. "I appreciate these questions, but in so many ways ... this is the end of the first semester of my freshman year. So my focus should be on what I'm doing here and not things outside of the state."

Ducey was on a conference call Feb. 29 about the 2016 race, in which Trump was a main point of discussion, hosted by Republican governors Susana Martinez of New Mexico and Scott Walker of Wisconsin. Ducey said he had to leave the call early and said he didn't say anything during the discussion. He declined to comment on what was said during the call.

Some Republicans have expressed concern that Trump will be unable to defeat Democratic frontrunner Hillary Clinton, and may drag down GOP tickets across the country if he's nominated. When asked whether he believed Trump could defeat Clinton, Ducey said, "So much of the discussion has been on one individual. I think Hillary Clinton can be defeated, and I intend to be part of the coalition that defeats her."

Ducey said several candidates — he didn't say which ones — have reached out to him, but that he won't make an endorsement prior to Arizona's March 22 presidential preference election. He said he was unable to meet with Trump during a visit the candidate made to Phoenix in December because he was having lunch with his grandmother.

"I can't cancel lunch with my 91-year-old grandmother," Ducey said. ☐

Proposed law would vet business regulations for anticompetitiveness

JEREMY DUDA

jeremy.duda@azcapitoltimes.com

The ripple effect from a U.S. Supreme Court ruling on anticompetitive business practices by North Carolina dentists is reaching Arizona, aided by Gov. Doug Ducey.

In February 2015, the high court ruled against the North Carolina Board of Dental Examiners, which had issued cease-and-desist letters to teeth-whitening businesses, insisting that they needed to be licensed dentists to practice their craft. The court said that the board, largely comprised of dentists, was simply trying to shut out competition from teeth whiteners.

To avoid such anticompetitive regulations in the future, the board said rules must be subject to “active supervision” from the state, and that the person providing the supervision cannot be an “active market participant.” The court said the North Carolina board erred by acting without the supervision of officials who were “politically accountable.”

Ducey is moving to put Arizona in compliance with that ruling. A provision of HB2501, a bill pushed by the Governor’s Office to streamline a handful of health industry regulatory boards, seeks to make sure that future regulations implemented by those entities complies with the ruling in North Carolina Board of Dental Examiners v. FTC. Under the bill, the director of the Arizona Department of Health Ser-

THE RULING

In North Carolina Board of Dental Examiners v. Federal Trade Commission, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that an anticompetitive regulatory policy implemented by a state board can only be immune from federal antitrust laws if it is under the active supervision of the state.

The court ruled that a supervisor must be able to review the substance of an anticompetitive regulation, that the supervisor must have the power to veto or modify the regulation, and that the supervisor must not be an “active market participant.”

vices will be tasked with reviewing regulations to ensure they do not have a “material anticompetitive effect.”

“We’re not talking about doctors and lawyers and the high-paying jobs,” said Gretchen Martinez, Ducey’s legislative affairs director. “A lot of these are sort of minimum- to medium-wage jobs. These are real people who have barriers to entry. And oftentimes these boards are designed to keep people out of the industry, which we fundamentally do not believe that’s the role of government.”

During a February hearing in the House Health Committee, Christina Corieri, the governor’s health policy adviser, said the state hasn’t yet faced any lawsuits alleging anticompetitiveness under the new parameters set by the Supreme Court.

“But that doesn’t mean we shouldn’t have a compliance regime in place,” Corieri said.

The health-related boards affected by HB2501 may not have faced allegations of anticompetitive regulations, but other regulatory entities have become embroiled in lawsuits in recent years accusing them of stifling competition. Martinez pointed to cases against the Arizona State Board of Cosmetology’s attempts to shut down a business that used fish to give a type of pedicure and businesses that practiced “threading,” in which a thin thread is used to remove unwanted eyebrow hair.

A more recent example is a lawsuit filed against the Arizona State Veterinary Medical Examiners Board by animal massage therapists who work with horses. The board argues that the animal massage practitioners must be licensed veterinarians in order to practice their craft.

Attorney Paul Avelar of the Institute for Justice, which represents the plaintiffs in the animal massage case — the institute also sued the cosmetology board on behalf of natural hair-braiding and threading practitioners — told the House Health Committee that every regulatory board in Arizona is the source of a potential antitrust lawsuit. Thanks to the North Carolina ruling, he said, Arizona now knows that its regulatory boards are only immune from antitrust lawsuits if their policies are actively supervised by the state.

“Boards themselves are not sovereign actors,” Avelar said. “So now we know we’re in that world.”

The House passed HB2501 on a party-line vote, but some Republicans have reservations. In committee, Rep. Regina Cobb, R-Lake Havasu City, said the bill was being rushed through too quickly, while Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix, had reservations about concentrating more power in the hands of the state health director. Boyer also questioned the lack of a concrete definition of “anticompetitive.”

Legislative Democrats took issue with several provisions of HB2501, including the anticompetitiveness review. Some, such as House Minority Leader Eric Meyer, suggested that the oversight and advice of the boards’ legal counsel, which is provided by the Attorney General’s Office, should be sufficient in helping them determine whether a regulation is anticompetitive.

Cynthia Driskell, who testified to the committee on behalf the Arizona Physical Therapy Association, shared Meyer’s concern, questioning the need for a massive restructuring of the way the state’s health regulatory boards operate.

“We feel like the oversight by the Attorney General’s Office has been adequate in dealing with things that may be of an anticompetitive nature,” Driskell said.

Avelar said the Attorney General’s Office is not an adequate check on regulations because its attorneys do not have veto power over proposed regulations. ☐

Legislation would extend stalking to cover threats to grandparents, family pets

HOWARD FISCHER

Capitol Media Services

Concluding that existing laws are outdated, a Senate panel voted on March 3 to include many more activities in the definition of “stalking” — things that can land a person in prison.

Deputy Maricopa County Attorney Will Munsil said there has been an increase in stalking. What makes that a concern, he told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, is these can be precursors to violence, particularly domestic violence.

The problem, Munsil said, is that existing laws do not cover a lot of what is occurring now. Part of the change in HB2419 expands who is covered.

Existing law defines stalking as doing things that would cause a reasonable person to fear for his or her own safety or that of an immediate family member.

Munsil said the new law extends that out as far as grandparents, nieces and nephews.

But it also covers threats to a family pet and livestock. And it also covers “significant others,” whether the person being stalked is living with that person currently or not.

Potentially the biggest change is extending the law to threats made by electronic communication, whether words or images.

“More and more of these threats are being made over the Internet, as you know,” Munsil testified.

This would be on top of existing provisions in the law which already make it a crime to use any sort of tracking device or GPS system to track anyone else for 12 or more hours, or on two or more occasions, no matter for how long.

Munsil assured lawmakers that the changes will not result in indiscriminate arrests.

“The statute still requires these acts take place on more than one occasion and that they create reasonable fear of injury to the victim or any family member, pets, property, to be punishable as stalking,” he said.

But the legislation does, in fact, ease the legal burden on prosecutors: Aside from showing “reasonable fear” on the part of the victim, they also could bring charges based on “emotional distress.”

The measure defines that as “significant mental suffering or distress” that may — but does not require — medical or professional treatment or counseling.

The unanimous vote sends the measure, which already was approved by the House, to the full Senate. ☐

Billboard proposal imperils dark skies astronomers need

RYAN VAN VELZER
The Associated Press

Astronomers and advocates for dark skies say a proposal to allow electronic billboards in the northwest region of the state threatens Arizona's billion dollar star-gazing industry.

Rep. Sonny Borrelli, R-Lake Havasu City, sponsored the bill that would exempt most of Mohave and La Paz counties from a 2012 agreement that designates a corridor for dark skies to limit light pollution around the state's observatories.

Advocates lobbying on behalf of the electronic billboard industry say they still meet the criteria for the original agreement and want Mohave County to receive the same treatment reserved for Phoenix, which allows the billboards.

Proponents working to protect the state's dark skies corridor worry the new areas could affect a national monument known for its night skies.

The House passed HB2507 on a 32-26 vote March 1. It now moves to the Senate.

What's Arizona's dark sky corridor?

Arizona's dark sky corridor is an area dedicated to protecting night skies from street lights, electronic signs and other sources of excess artificial light, known as light pollution.

Astronomers and star gazers use the corridor to observe the night sky for fun, research, GPS monitoring and even national defense purposes, said Jeffrey Hall, director of the Lowell Observatory.

Lawmakers worked with the electronic billboard industry and astronomers to negotiate a compromise in 2012 that sets up buffer zones for the state's observatories, including Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Kitt Peak National Observatory outside of Tucson and Mount Graham National Observatory near Safford.

The agreement allowed electronic billboards in Phoenix and west in areas along Interstate 10 and I-8 to the Colorado River.

What's at stake for astronomers?

Arizona is home to three of the country's largest telescopes. The astronomy industry has capital investments totaling $1.3 billion in Arizona as of 2008 and spends an additional $250 million annually, Hall said.

Hall says the measure would renege on the 2012 compromise and could lead to fewer limits on light pollution in the future.

"It sends a very bad message to future potential investors that Arizona is slowly loosening its restrictions that the Arizona dark sky community depends on," he said.

The proposal would also allow electronic billboards along the Interstate 15 corridor in the northwest corner of the state that could impair a park with a dark sky designation, said John Barentine, program manager with the Dark-Sky Association.

"We have to step up because we have a resource that is immediately threatened by this bill," he said.

Why not allow electronic billboards?

Dark skies advocates are concerned light the billboards emit could affect the sensitive technologies used to look at distant celestial bodies.

But concessions made in the 2012 agreement force the electronic billboard industry to dim their displays at night and shut them off after 11 p.m.

Tim La Sota, who lobbies on behalf of Lamar Advertising, said Mohave and La Paz counties fall outside the buffer zone for observatories and were largely left out of discussions during the 2012 compromise.

La Sota said dark skies advocates don't have to worry about electronic billboards in the rural part of the state.

"People aren't going to put these billboards out on an untraveled country road. It doesn't make any commercial sense," he said.

Billboard companies would most likely build new electronic signs along Interstate 40, Interstate 15 and U.S. Highway 93 around Kingman and Bullhead City. ☞

Kavanagh bill to expand sex offender registry advances

SYDNEY GREENE
sydney.greene@azcapitoltimes.com

The Arizona Sex Offender Information Registry is a resource for many Arizona residents, but not all convicted sex offenders registered in the state of Arizona are actually listed on the database.

A Senate bill would change that.

The House Judiciary Committee voted unanimously for Sen. John Kavanagh's SB1286, which would expand the lists of persons on the sexual registry to include Class 1 offenders. The bill previously passed the full Senate unanimously.

Currently, the law only allows Class 2 and Class 3 offenders on the website, not the lower-level offenders. SB1286 would place offenders on the database who have been convicted of certain lesser sex-related crimes.

On the Department of Public Safety's website, the department cautions searchers that: "WARNING - This site does not contain information on all convicted sex offenders! Information is only provided for sex offenders with risk assessment scores of Level 2 (Intermediate) or Level 3 (High), risk level information."

Kavanagh, R-Scottsdale, said the omission of Class 1 offenders in the original law presented a safety issue for Arizona residents.

"This (the law) was never intended and is absurd," Kavanagh said.

The committee struggled with how sex offenders are classified and what type of crime determines one's place on the sex offender registry.

Rep. J.D. Mesnard, R-Chandler, said he was concerned that all offenders, no matter what classification or offense committed, would be treated the same.

"Are we saying everyone is the same?" Mesnard said. "Because I don't think they are."

Cheryl Campbell, a member of the public, tearfully testified against the bill, stating that it would affect someone close to her who made "a small mistake" in the past.

She argued that offenders who have not had any recent sex-related offenses for a certain period of time should be withheld from the registry.

Kavanagh said he would not rule out the woman's suggestion and would consider amendments.

"I am open to that, but I need to see where (the prosecutors) stand," Kavanagh said.

Despite some public opposition, Kara Helland, a northern Arizona woman who worked with Kavanagh on the bill, said her ex-husband was serving time in prison for molestation, and she wanted to see the bill passed.

"These children don't have a voice," Helland said. "The child that was involved in my crime was involved in therapy and is going to be in therapy for a very, very long time. The citizens of this state want to know who lives next door."

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Eddie Farnsworth, R-Gilbert, and other committee members worried that the bill would "cast a net too wide" and might limit opportunities for past offenders who are reformed and have been clean since their offense.

The bill must still be approved by the House Rules Committee before a debate and vote by the full House. ☞

Percentage of money spent on instruction reaches new low

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

Arizona schools spent less of the money they received last year in the classroom than in any of the 15 years the state has been keeping track.

The new report from the Auditor General's Office found that just 53.6 cents out of every dollar spent to educate Arizona youngsters in 2015 went for instruction. That includes everything from teachers, aides and even coaches to supplies like pencils and papers and some activities like band or choir.

Aside from being at the lowest point since the agency started looking at the issue in 2001, it also is 7.2 cents below the national average.

But this is about more than percentages. The report also says there are fewer dollars going to schools overall.

Between 2004 and 2015, total per pupil spending actually decreased $424 when inflation is taken into account. That includes the years where the governor and Legislature illegally ignored a 2000 voter mandate to boost state aid annually to account for inflation.

What happened during that same time, the audit says, is classroom spending decreased by an even larger amount at $629 per pupil, as spending in other operational areas increased or remained relatively steady.

Chuck Essigs, lobbyist for the Arizona Association of School Business Officials, said it's not surprising that classroom spending as a share of all dollars continues to decline.

"If you're really low spending in your state, it still costs you money to fix your roofs," he said. "It costs you money to heat your buildings, cool your buildings, pay for the lights and everything, whether you're in a state that spends a lot of money on education or a very low amount."

Put simply, Essigs said if some costs remain fixed, the only place for schools to trim when state funding runs short is on the instructional side.

But Vicki Hanson, who manages the audit, said the numbers don't back that up.

"If costs were fixed, during the years where districts got more money, we would have seen the classroom dollar percentage go up," she said. "But it didn't."

Hanson acknowledged Arizona schools, on average, spend far less than the national average on all operational expenses. The figure here is $7,658 per pupil; the comparable average is $10,763.

"But the question is, why does that lower spending need to come from the classroom," she asked.

There is an effect of that section of the budget being the place that's squeezed.

Between 2004 and 2015, the average teacher salary, adjusted for inflation, decreased 8 percent despite the average years of experience staying about the same. And just in the past five years, the statewide annual teacher salary decreased from $47,077 to $46,008 despite a 4 percent increase in average years of teacher experience.

And during the same time, the average number of students per teacher increased from 17.9 to 18.6.

Essigs said that 53.6-cent figure on classroom spending is misleading. He said it's "very narrow," including only teacher salaries and supplies.

"It doesn't include counselors, it doesn't include nurses, it doesn't include teacher training," Essigs said. And he said those are equally a part of what schools need to do.

"If you're a district that has a lot of children at risk and you need counseling services, it makes you look like you're spending less (proportionately) on teaching kids," Essigs said.

Tim Ogle, executive director of the Arizona School Boards Association, said the trend in the report is not surprising. He said it is a direct result of inadequate state funding.

And Ogle said it shows the importance of voters approving Proposition 123 in May. If that passes it clears the way for an extra $3.5 billion to be put into schools in the next decade.

"Our teachers are underpaid and our classrooms are too big," he said.

What that also leads to is a shortage of qualified teachers. Ogle said schools fill the gap with substitutes who are paid less than trained professionals, a move that in turn means fewer dollars spent in the classroom.

Daniel Scarpinato, press aide to Gov. Doug Ducey, said the report underscores "the very real need for more total dollars to our schools." He said that's exactly what parents, teachers and administrators told his boss when he visited schools last year.

"That's what the plan that was passed in the special session does," Scarpinato said, referring to Prop. 123 that is going to voters in May. He also said the governor's Classrooms First Council is focused on the same goal.

"There's a need to increase the pie," Scarpinato said, rather than simply arguing over how the limited funds should be used.

He said, though, Ducey wants to focus on more than just the amount of cash provided to schools..

"The governor's interest is really, as we're adding additional dollars that parents have an expectation that they're going to see better performance for their kids and better academics for their kids," Scarpinato said.

"The interest is how do we use the dollars going in to best achieve that," he continued. "That might be different from school to school, based on their needs and their particular challenges." ☞

House approves free speech measures for colleges, universities

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

If you've got something to say, state lawmakers want to be sure you would be free to say it anywhere you want on college and university campuses – as long as you say it outside.

With no debate March 1, the House approved two measures designed not only to guarantee the right to free speech but also the right to not be shunted off in some corner of the campus.

HB2615 spells out that, with limited exceptions, community colleges and state-run universities cannot limit where the right of free speech can be exercised. The legislation applies to common areas of campuses and not inside buildings.

Rep. Anthony Kern, R-Glendale, said the measure is a direct outgrowth of his experience when he was younger trying to hand out material about his church at Glendale Community College. He said college officials shunted students off to a designated “free speech zone,” a place that was nowhere near the people his group was trying to reach.

— Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix

In essence, Kern said, his legislation makes the entire campus a “free speech zone.”

Rep. Paul Boyer, R-Phoenix, said his HB2548 has the same purpose.

“I’m actually grateful that our public universities don’t have free speech zones,” he said.

“But our community colleges do,” Boyer continued. “And I want to see those free speech zones go away.”

Boyer’s measure, however, has something that Kern’s does not – teeth.

HB2548 permits the attorney general or any person who believes his or her “non-commercial expressive activity” was blocked on a college or university campus to file suit.

But Boyer backed away from his original proposal, which required a court to award at least $500 to a person who wins such a lawsuit, with another $50 a day for every additional day those speech rights were denied. Instead, the only thing a court could do is order a school to allow the speech and enjoin it from enforcing any restrictions or policies that limit someone’s First Amendment rights.

As with the other measure, HB2548 does allow schools to have policies that limit the time, place and manner of such speech, but “only if those restrictions employ clear, published, content and viewpoint-neutral criteria and provide for alternative means of expression.”

But it does not permit schools to break up an event or demonstration, particularly for students and faculty, saying any rules must “allow for members of the campus community to spontaneously and contemporaneously assemble.”

Both measures need a final House roll-call vote before going to the Senate.

Even without the legislation, there already is litigation.

The Alliance Defending Freedom is representing two students who said Paradise Valley Community College is illegally requiring groups to get permits and provide prior notice. The policy also restricts those who want to demonstrate or hand out literature to certain areas of campus. The college has yet to respond to the lawsuit.

College officials have denied they are violating anyone’s rights. ☞

Thousands of pro-life, pro-choice activists rally outside Supreme Court

KATIE BIERI
Cronkite News

WASHINGTON – Arizonans were among the thousands of pro-life and pro-choice supporters who rallied outside the U.S. Supreme Court on March 2, as it took up one of the most-divisive issues for the court and the country.

The justices were considering a challenge to a Texas law that imposes strict medical regulations on abortion clinics, requiring that clinics meet standards of an ambulatory surgical center and that clinic doctors have privileges at a hospital no more than 30 miles away.

Supporters say the law is meant to protect women. But critics – including those chanting “Stop the sham!” in front of the Supreme Court – say the law would end up closing three-quarters of the abortion clinics in the state. They see the law as little more than a thinly disguised attempt to restrict abortion access.

“I feel like it’s very important to protect these rights, so it upsets me. It deeply upsets me,” said Karl Pederson, a Scottsdale native who was at the rally.

“These rights have been guaranteed by the Supreme Court as a federal right to all women everywhere in the United States, and the fact that people are trying to limit that deeply upsets me,” he said.

Pederson, a political science freshman at George Washington University, was in the midst of a mostly pro-choice crowd, many dressed in purple and waving pro-choice signs.

But placards with pictures of fetuses stuck out in various spots as small pockets of pro-life protesters held their own outside the court.

Virginia resident Justine Worden criticized the claims of pro-choice protesters that they speak for women.

“To tell women that they need abortion to be free or to be powerful or to be equal is wrong and misogynistic,” said Worden.

She had her arms linked with a small

Pro-choice protesters rallied outside the Supreme Court as it heard arguments over a Texas law that would apply strict regulations on abortion clinics, shuttering up to three-fourths of the clinics in the state.

number of other pro-life supporters who were squared off against a similarly linked group of pro-choice protesters.

“Basic protections for clinics, basic safety precautions for clinics. I think that’s pro-women,” said Josee Turner, another pro-life supporter of the Texas law.

Texas officials argued in court documents that the state’s interest in protecting the health of women and the safety of medical facilities like abortion clinics outweighs any resulting limits on a woman’s ability to obtain an abortion.

That argument carried little weight with Miriam Yeung, executive director of the National Asian Pacific American Women’s Forum, which she said has worked extensively in Arizona.

“The so-called prenatal non-discrimination laws that are being passed in Arizona and other states are using lies about our country to try to make abortion access difficult,” said Yeung at the rally.

Phoenix native Risa Isard confessed that she was not all that familiar with the case, but she believes strongly in abortion rights.

“I think that it’s really important that Arizona women, and all women in this country, have access to good education and options and abortion, if that’s what they choose,” Isard said.

The case, Whole Women’s Health v. Hellerstedt, is the first significant abortion case the court has considered in almost a decade. It was also the first significant case of any kind the court has heard since the unexpected death last month of Justice Antonin Scalia.

With the death of Scalia, one of the most conservative voices on the court, the justices are split evenly between four who tend to be liberal and four who tend to be conservative. Should the court split on the Texas case, the Circuit Court ruling that allowed most of the Texas law to take effect would stand – although the high court could reconsider the case once a replacement for Scalia is seated.

The court is likely to issue a decision before leaving on its traditional summer recess in July. ☐

Senate votes to allow people with conceal-carry permits into public buildings

HOWARD FISCHER
Capitol Media Services

Saying signs don’t protect people from “homicidal maniacs,” the state Senate voted 18-12 on March 3 to allow people with concealed-carry permits to bring guns into unsecured public buildings.

SB1257 would overrule existing laws that allow government agencies to declare their buildings to be weapons-free zones by posting signs at entrances and providing lockers so those who are armed can store their guns. Instead, they would have to buy and install metal detectors and have staffers available to check those coming in.

And if they did not, then those who have state-issued permits would be free to ignore the signs.

That means more than the 255,000 Arizonans who have the permits. It also would apply to anyone from any other state that has an agreement to recognize permits from here if Arizona recognizes their CCW permits.

Sen. Steve Farley, D-Tucson, chided colleagues for imposing a financial burden on local governments to hire the staff and buy the equipment.

But Sen. John Kavanagh, R-Fountain Hills, said there is no burden at all. He said there is an alternative: Don’t put up the detectors and let permit holders keep their weapons with them.

He said local governments are operating under the belief that the signs matter.

But Kavanagh said only “law-abiding” people obey the signs and leave their weapons outside or check them. This will simply allow those who have CCW permits to keep them.

And everyone else?

“People who do not have CCW permits who are homicidal maniacs, robbers, rapists, killers and assaulters will enter that building,” Kavanagh said. He said if there are no metal detectors to keep them out, “we need some CCW permit holders in there for protection.”

Kavanagh said it’s not like his legislation opens the door to just anyone bringing guns into public buildings. The exemption from the no-guns requirement applies only to those with CCW permits.

“Consequently, the person will have to have gone through a complete fingerprint and background check, will have to have taken a course that deals with the legal aspects of using a firearm, safety issues, and would have to qualify and show that they can shoot, hit a target,” he said.

Farley sniffed at that making any difference.

He quoted from the Department of Public Safety website saying that changes in a law in 2010 removed many of the statutory requirements to get a CCW permit and instead provided alternate ways of getting one. The result, said Farley, is DPS is no longer checking to ensure that those who claim to offer CCW training are complying with state law.

Sen. Martin Quezada, D-Phoenix, said the problem is even deeper than that.

“We don’t know if an individual who has a CCW permit has the technical skills to operate that instrument in a highly stressful situation,” he said, the kind of situations that will occur if there’s an active shooter inside a public building.

“This isn’t at a gun range where you’re pointing at a still target,” Quezada said. ☐

HOUSE

JURISDICTION OVER CIVIL LAWSUITS

Voting yes: McSally, Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert, Franks

Voting no: Kirkpatrick, Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema,

Not voting: None

Voting 229 for and 189 against, the House on Feb. 25 passed a GOP-drafted bill (HR 3624) aimed at shifting many civil lawsuits from state courts, where plaintiffs such as consumers are thought to fare better, to federal courts, which are seen as more friendly to defendants such as corporations. Backers said the bill would combat fraudulent forum-shopping by plaintiffs' lawyers, while opponents said it seeks to fix a problem that does not exist. The core of the bill is to give federal trial-level judges more tools for assigning cases to federal courts in "diversity of jurisdiction" proceedings.

Doug Collins, R-Ga., said the bill would "protect innocent local parties, often small-business owners, from being dragged into expensive lawsuits." It would do so by allowing judges "to look at evidence that the trial lawyers aren't acting in good faith in adding local defendants...."

Jim McGovern, D-Mass., called the bill "a giveaway to big corporations and big special interests....that seems like it was written in the Republican congressional campaign committee to make big contributors happy. It does nothing to protect the well-being and the interests of average Americans (or) small businesses...."

A yes vote was to send the bill to the Senate, where it could advance.

SEXUAL ABUSE OF MINORS

Voting yes: Kirkpatrick, Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema

Voting no: McSally, Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert, Franks

Not voting: None

The House on Feb. 25 defeated, 180 for and 239 against, a bid by Democrats to exempt lawsuits alleging sexual abuse or exploitation of minors from HR 3624 (above). The intent of the motion was to prevent such suits from being transferred to federal courts in "diversity of jurisdiction" disputes. Plaintiffs with limited resources are thought to fare better in closer-to-home, faster-moving state courts than in federal courts, where clogged dockets and procedural rules work to the advantage of defendants with deep pockets.

Bonnie Watson Coleman, D-N.J., said: "The new burden that this bill would place on the average American is simply outrageous. The least that we can do is protect children who have already been victimized by sexual assault."

Bob Goodlatte, R-Va., said: "Reject this motion...and, in so doing, expand the opportunities of all local citizens and small businesses that would otherwise be smothered by costly and meritless lawsuits."

A yes vote was to adopt the Democratic motion.

HUNTING, FISHING ON FEDERAL LAND

Voting yes: McSally, Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert, Franks

Voting no: Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema

Not voting: Kirkpatrick

Voting 242 for and 161 against, the House on Feb. 26 passed a bipartisan bill (HR 2406) that would authorize federally funded shooting ranges on state and federal lands, limit Environmental Protection Agency regulation of ammunition and fishing lures as toxic substances and open all National Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service land to hunting, fishing and other public recreation. The bill also would allow firearms to be carried on Army Corps of Engineers water projects. In addition, it would permit certain U.S. hunters to import from Canada several dozen hides of polar bears they legally killed there before May 15, 2008, when polar bears gained protection as a depleted species under the Marine Mammal Protection Act. The bill would allow an expanded use of body-gripping animal traps on public land.

Robert Wittman, R-Va., said the bill "defends law-abiding individuals' constitutional right to keep and bear arms on lands managed by the Army Corps of Engineers and ensures that hunters are not burdened by outdated laws preventing bows and crossbows from being transported across national parks."

Criticizing the bill's soft stance on ivory trafficking, Earl Blumenauer, D-Ore., said: "The trade in ivory fuels some of the most heinous acts by some of the most vicious people in the world. Terrorists use these funds for their horrific activities, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa...."

A yes vote was to send the bill to the Senate, where it is expected to advance.

CONTAMINATION FROM FISHING TACKLE LEAD

Voting yes: Grijalva, Gallego, Sinema

Voting no: McSally, Gosar, Salmon, Schweikert, Franks

Not voting: Kirkpatrick

Voting 165 for and 238 against, the House on Feb. 26 defeated a Democratic bid to require research into the extent to which lead from fishing tackle is contaminating ponds and streams used for recreation. Under this motion to HR 2406 (above), manufacturers would conduct research into their products and make their findings available for public review.

Brenda Lawrence, D-Mich., referred to lead contamination in Flint, Mich., water supplies and said: "One hundred thousand residents of Flint lost a basic human right — access to clean water."

Robert Wittman, R-Va., said the appropriate legislative vehicle for the Democratic motion would be the Toxic Substances Control Act rather than this measure.

A yes vote was to require industry research into lead contamination from fishing tackle.

SENATE

ROBERT CALIFF FOR FDA COMMISSIONER

Voting yes: McCain, Flake

Voting no: None

Not voting: None

Voting 89 for and four against, the Senate on Feb. 24 confirmed Dr. Robert W. Califf as commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. Califf, 64, was a professor of cardiology at the Duke University School of Medicine before joining the FDA one year ago as deputy commissioner. His nomination drew criticism over his former professional ties to the pharmaceutical industry and his calls for streamlining FDA rules for approving new drugs and medical devices. Some critics said he would be a lax regulator of addictive drugs to control pain.

Presidential candidates Ted Cruz, R-Texas, Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., and Marco Rubio, R-Fla., did not vote.

Patty Murray, D-Wash., said that as FDA chief, Califf would uphold "the highest standards of patient and consumer safety....and always put science over politics."

Joe Manchin, D-W.Va., said that because of his ties to the pharmaceutical industry, Califf would prove unable "to stem the tide of the opioid (prescription pain-killer) crisis we have all over this country."

A yes vote was to confirm the nominee.

Officials to review goat, sheep proposal

ANCHORAGE — State officials will consider a proposal that would require goat and sheep owners to have permits for their animals in an effort to prevent disease transmission among the wild and domesticated species.

KTUU-TV reports the proposal submitted by the Alaska Wild Sheep Foundation seeks to have goat and sheep owners within 15 miles of Dall sheep habitat to obtain permits. They would also have to keep their domesticated animals inside a fenced enclosure and get them tested for diseases.

The foundation says the regulations would prevent the spread of diseases that have impacted animal populations in other states.

Park district to vote on closing gun club

CASTRO VALLEY — The East Bay Regional Park District is slated to vote on whether to close the Chabot Gun Club, amid concerns that taxpayers will be stuck having to pay millions of dollars to clean up pollution from spent bullets.

The San Francisco Chronicle reports that tougher state environmental regulations are prompting the vote. A 2015 state law requires the club to install filters on its storm drains and to clean lead contamination caused by bullets fired into hills at Anthony Chabot Regional Park east of San Francisco, the newspaper reports.

Lead from bullets is leaching into groundwater and creeks that flow into Lake Chabot, which is supposed to provide a backup drinking-water supply for the East Bay Municipal Utility District. A park district spokeswoman says no trace of lead has been found in the lake.

AG says governor's budget fee plan would be legal

DENVER — Democratic Gov. John Hickenlooper's proposal to reclassify a Medicaid-related fee to balance the state budget and avoid taxpayer refunds is legal, Republican Attorney General Cynthia Coffman said in an opinion issued Feb. 29.

Debate over the arcane fee has dominated the Legislature this year. Hickenlooper and

OREGON

Mayoral candidate's homeless plan plagiarizes rival

PORTLAND — Portland mayoral candidate Ted Wheeler's new plan to tackle homelessness includes two statements plagiarized from his rival, Jules Bailey, plus two other phrases with very similar language.

Wheeler's campaign manager, Michael Cox, initially told The Oregonian/OregonLive on Feb. 29 that any similarities were "totally coincidental." But after reviewing the statements, Cox took responsibility and said he "made a grave error" in the editing process and unknowingly used Bailey's words.

"This was an editing error," Cox said. "We have begun taking steps to correct it. We apologize."

Stacey Dycus, a campaign consultant for Bailey, said voters should recognize the value of Bailey's ideas.

"I think it demonstrates that when they're looking for solutions, they look to Jules Bailey's website because he's already working on these issues — not just talking about it," she said of the Wheeler campaign.

Homelessness and affordable housing have become a driving theme in this year's race to replace Mayor Charlie Hales, who recently sanctioned tent camping.

Democrats who control the House want to remove about $750 million generated by the fee from constitutional spending limits that otherwise would require refunds. At stake, they say, is long-term investment in roads and schools in the fast-growing state.

Republicans who control the Senate insist that Colorado can make do with what it has and that residents are entitled to refunds under the limits known as the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights.

The real problem, they contend, is out-of-control Medicaid spending. Colorado expanded Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act and spends about $2.5 billion on the health care plan for the needy.

Idaho

Contentious foster care reform bill advances

BOISE — After four hours of testimony Feb. 29, an Idaho House panel passed a contentious foster care reform bill that would allow judges to oversee adoptions and implement a timeframe for relatives to apply to care for a child.

The House Judiciary, Rules and Administration Committee voted unanimously in support of the measure, despite concerns voiced by the Department of Health and Welfare and other child welfare workers.

Miren Unsworth, manager for the state's child welfare program, specifically argued against implementing the stricter timeframes mandated in the bill, saying it wouldn't give relatives of children enough time to respond.

However, Rep. Christy Perry, R-Nampa, said the department has known about alleged deficiencies for 10 years and has done nothing to fix the problems.

Kansas

Coalition pushes for criminal justice reform

TOPEKA — Lawyers, a prison rehabilitation organization and faith communities launched a coalition Feb. 29 that will push for changes to the Kansas criminal justice system.

Kansans for Smart Justice announced a series of measures, including reducing sentences for nonviolent drug offenders, during a Statehouse news conference. The American Civil Liberties Union is among the 13 organizations that are part of the coalition.

Micah Kubic, executive director of the ACLU of Kansas, said the coalition will highlight state trends including a rise in incarceration despite the falling crime rate. He said at the news conference that the Kansas prison population quadrupled from 1978 to 2014.

"The criminal justice system in Kansas is broken," Kubic said. "Too many people are being sent to prison for too long, for too trivial of reasons, costing us ... and doing too great of a harm to communities in the process."

Montana

Governor Bullock files for re-election

HELENA — Gov. Steve Bullock has formally filed to run for a second term.

The Democrat was joined by his family and Lt. Gov. Mike Cooney on Feb. 29 as he submitted election papers with the Secretary of State's Office.

Thus far, Bullock is the only candidate to file papers to run for governor. He'll soon be joined by Bozeman Republican Greg Gianforte, who announced his bid for governor in January but has yet to file papers with the secretary of state. Neither is expected to have any serious challengers during their respective June 7 primaries, but Bullock and Gianforte are expected to wage expensive campaigns.

Midwest economic survey index up

OMAHA — Figures from a survey of supply managers in nine Midwest and Plains states have risen for the second month in a row, suggesting more improvement in the regional economy.

A report issued March 1 says the Mid-American Business Conditions Index climbed to 50.5 in February from 48.3 in January. The survey results are compiled into a collection of indexes ranging from zero to 100. Survey organizers say any score above 50 suggests economic growth. A score below that suggests decline. The survey covers Arkansas, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oklahoma and South Dakota.

Governor cuts ribbon on 'Electric Highway' charge station

BEATTY — Gov. Brian Sandoval cut the ribbon on the first in a series of electric car charging stations between Las Vegas and Reno.

A ceremony was held March 1 at a gas station in Beatty. Some of the ports can recharge a car in four hours, while others can charge a car to 80 percent in 30 minutes.

Sandoval announced the so-called "Electric Highway" last summer. The project aims to help drivers complete the 450-mile journey in their short-range electric cars, and boost rural economies by bringing tourists who need to charge their cars to small towns.

Officials are still negotiating partnerships to get charging stations in Fallon, Tonopah and Hawthorne. Money for the project is coming from NV Energy and Nevada's renewable energy tax abatements.

Officials monitoring 2,000 gallons of saltwater, oil spill

The Health Department estimates 40 barrels of saltwater and eight barrels of oil spilled at a site operated by White Rock Oil and Gas on Feb. 26, about 18 miles northwest of Belfield. Saltwater is a byproduct of oil production. A barrel holds 42 gallons.

Officials say an undetermined amount of saltwater and oil flowed into a stock pond. Officials with the Health Department and the state Oil and Gas Division are on site.

Nearly $200K missing from jail inmate account

TULSA — A state audit has revealed nearly $200,000 in Tulsa jail inmate funds are apparently unaccounted for and suspected to be missing.

The State Auditor and Inspector's Office fiscal year 2015 audit of the Tulsa County government noted that county personnel suspect about $188,877 in funds are missing, the Tulsa World reported Feb. 29. The account holds inmates' funds for them to use on commissary items or phone card purchases.

The inmate trust account is to be the subject of a special audit involving a forensic accountant and the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation. The special audit was announced Feb. 9 and was to start in late February or early March.

Sheriff's Office spokesman Justin Green has said the funds were first discovered to be missing in 2012. He said the agency has been unable to rectify the issue on its own.

City Council close to approving drone ordinance

ABERDEEN — Aberdeen leaders are close to approving an ordinance regulating the use of hobby and recreational drones in the city.

The ordinance would allow drones on private property but ban them over city-owned land with the exception of two city parks, an arboretum and a nature area. It also would create a one-mile no-fly zone around the city airport.

The American News reports that the City Council gave initial approval to the regulations on Feb. 29 and is expected to give final approval next week. City Attorney Ron Wager says the Federal Aviation Administration has reviewed the ordinance.

Texas

Stricter policies on school absences draw parent backlash

AUSTIN — Despite being in the top 1 percent of her class, Lauren Molloy was at risk of failing to receive credit for courses last semester after a series of absences for medical appointments were counted against her by the Austin school district.

Molloy, a McCallum High School senior, has a rare congenital bone disease that requires her to receive weekly physical therapy, and last semester she had multiple doctor visits and exams, including MRIs.

Such medical visits previously didn't affect whether a student received course credit, but now they do as the school district ramps up its policies regarding absences.

Students can appeal to an attendance committee if they've attended at least 75 percent of the time, and they can make up classes by attending Saturday school to restore their class credit. But some parents — including about a dozen who wrote letters to their campus administrators — are complaining that Austin's stricter policy will mean more children going to school when they're sick and more hassle for the parents of students who struggle with chronic ailments. At least one neighboring district is more lenient.

State law requires students in kindergarten through 12th grade to be in attendance for at least 90 percent of the days a class is offered. But districts have varying interpretations of the law and offer different exceptions.

Utah

Pared-down Medicaid plan wins support from some left, right

SALT LAKE CITY — After several years of Utah legislators rejecting plans to expand Medicaid, a small but bipartisan group of lawmakers endorsed a proposal Feb. 29 that could win favor from the Republican-controlled Legislature.

The plan comes from Rep. Jim Dunnigan, who serves as majority leader of Republicans in Utah's House of Representatives, who have rejected several plans in past years endorsed by the governor and Senate.

The House GOP has rejected past plans, citing fears that the state's share of the cost could balloon and Washington may not follow through on its offer to pay for the program down the road.

Under President Barack Obama's signature health care law, Washington will pick up most of the cost if states open up the programs to help more of the poor. In Utah, that includes about 60,000 people who currently are ineligible for Medicaid or federal help paying for coverage.

Washington

AG seeks ruling in GMO food labeling case

OLYMPIA — Washington Attorney General Bob Ferguson is asking a judge to find that an Iowa-based group violated state campaign disclosure laws as it backed a 2013 food labeling initiative.

Ferguson sued Food Democracy Action! in December 2014, alleging it concealed the true sources of $200,000 in contributions it made to support Initiative 522. Voters narrowly rejected the measure that would have required labeling of genetically modified foods in Washington.

Ferguson's office said Feb. 29 that the state filed a motion for summary judgment in Thurston County Superior Court on Feb. 26. A hearing is set for March 25. Ferguson alleges the group violated state laws by failing to register as a political committee and failing to disclose names of individual donors.

The organization's founder, David Murphy, says they were simply late in filing its reports and did not try to hide their donors or intentionally violate the law. Ferguson has also filed a campaign lawsuit against the Grocery Manufacturers Association, which worked to defeat the measure.

Wyoming

Marijuana edibles bill dies in House

CHEYENNE — A bill seeking to clarify Wyoming penalties for possession of marijuana brownies and other foods and beverages containing the drug failed Feb. 29 when it missed a legislative action deadline.

The Wyoming Senate last week passed a bill that called for making it a felony to possess more than three ounces of food or drink containing marijuana or THC, its active ingredient. But the House Judiciary Committee last week stripped out the felony language after hearing testimony that it's difficult to gauge how much THC is present.

Wyoming has seen a spike in possession of marijuana edibles and beverages since Colorado legalized recreational marijuana use in 2014. Neighboring Montana allows medical use of marijuana.

State District Judge Steven Sharpe of Cheyenne last year dismissed charges against a man who had 2 pounds of marijuana cookies, candies, bread and chocolate bars. The judge ruled existing state law outlaws possession of marijuana in its plant form.

The Wyoming Supreme Court hasn't yet ruled on the issue, which could leave district judges in other parts of Wyoming to come up with differing interpretations of the law.

TIMES PAST

St. Joseph's Academy

First Catholic School in the Territory

The original St. Joseph's Academy (called the Convent School) was established in 1868 adjacent to Tucson's old St. Augustine Cathedral. It was a thick-walled adobe building, built in the "fashion of the country" with earthen floors and a roof of sagebrush and cactus interfaced on pine rafters and covered with mud.

In 1870, the Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet arrived in Tucson. In the latter half of that decade, Mother Gonzaga Grand, seeking better accommodations for both students and nuns, petitioned Bishop Jean Baptiste Salpointe to raise funds for a new structure.

It was a time-consuming process, and not until 1885 did construction begin on a new facility at the northwest corner of 15th Street and 6th Avenue.

The new building, constructed of solid stone, was a vast improvement over its predecessor, but financial constraints kept it to one story. The building was inadequate from the beginning. Over the next decade it was enlarged and a second story added, giving it the appearance of mass evidenced in this photograph taken around the turn of the century.

The old school at St. Augustine continued operating with an open enrollment, while the new St. Joseph's was dedicated exclusively to the education of girls. Early on, curriculum consisted of Christian doctrine, reading, writing, spelling, simple arithmetic, music and domestic science.

St. Joseph's was the first Catholic school in the Arizona Territory, and Bishop Salpointe took pride in the sisters' accomplishments: "From the beginning," he wrote, "the Sisters made their school a success, as it was largely attended and justly appreciated by everybody."

In 1920, when the sisters celebrated their 50th anniversary in Arizona, growing pains were again evident. A decade later, in 1931, the sisters purchased a 35-room mansion situated on 175 acres of desert, nine miles east of the city proper.

St. Joseph's was put on the block for $100,000, but there were no takers. Later it was reopened as Immaculate Heart Academy, serving as an educational institution, until the 1970s.

The former downtown academy on 15th Street was sold in the early 2000s and the site was converted into high-end loft apartments designed to maintain the historical features of the old building.

HEADLINES

From the Past

This week five years ago (March 4, 2011)

Critics fear law to add jobs will cut school money

When he unveiled an ambitious plan to improve the state's public schools, Arizona Superintendent of Public Instruction John Huppenthal had lofty goals: introducing reading coaches for classrooms, increasing one-on-one tutoring of students, updating the data system that stores information about specific schools and districts. Then, on Feb. 16, Gov. Jan Brewer signed into law HB2001, the Arizona Competitiveness package, which opponents argue may deal a crushing blow to education funding in the state.

Biggs says dump regents; regents say dump Biggs' bill

Sen. Andy Biggs wants Arizona's universities to have the freedom to choose their own paths, but critics of his plan worry that the freedom will incite more infighting than innovating. Biggs said SB1115, his proposal to eliminate the Arizona Board of Regents and replace it with a board of trustees for each state university, would allow the schools to decide on their own what types of programs, colleges and courses they offer.

Pearce points to Constitution for power to oust activists

In banning some immigration activists from setting foot in the Senate building, Senate President Russell Pearce insists he has the backing of the state Constitution, which says each legislative chamber will determine its own rules and procedures.

This week 10 years ago (March 3, 2006)

Yet another English learner bill sent to governor

The third time is said to be the charm, but Republican leaders are hoping the fourth time is the charm as the Legislature on March 2 approved another bill to fund English language programs in public schools, bring the state in compliance with a federal court ruling and put a halt to million-dollar-a-day fines.

Lawmaker sinks own bill targeting athletics classifications

Legislation aimed at preventing the organization that oversees high school athletics in Arizona from classifying private schools differently from their public counterparts is, at the sponsor's request, no longer moving through the system. Rep. Steve Yarbrough said he has asked the speaker to let HB2772 die before going to a vote because he has received assurance from the Arizona Interscholastic Association that the effort within that group to treat public and private schools differently is not feasible.

This week 20 years ago (March 1, 1996)

Overton, others fire back at county assessor

Phones have been ringing off the hook at the Legislature for the past two weeks as angry Maricopa County residents have called their elected representatives about steep increases in property taxes. Rep. Jerry Overton has been one of the lawmakers whose secretaries have been living on the telephone recently. Then he received his valuation from Maricopa County, where residential valuations rose an average of 14 percent, and he decided once and for all something needed to be done. That something is a resolution to ask voters to amend the state Constitution to freeze residential property (Class 5) assessments at 1996 levels in perpetuity.

Public Notices

Public notice has been an important part of the public's ability to monitor government actions that affect them since the founding of our country. These notices are mandated by law to be published in newspapers and available to the community. Newspapers across Arizona also publish them online. To be effective public notice must satisfy several criteria. It must be:

- Verifiable. The independent publisher is able to certify the notice is published intact, without subsequent alteration, on time, and for the full duration of its required publication schedule.
- Archived. A tamper-proof copy of the notice is maintained for a significant period, preferably in perpetuity
- Accessible. The notice is available to the public.

• Independent. The publisher of the notice is without a vested interest in the content of the notice and free of any appearance of conflicts of interest

No. MC-1600003-PHX-ROS / UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
v C. ANTHONY WILLIAMS
ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE
IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

United States of America,
Petitioner,
v.
C. Anthony Williams,
Respondent.

No. MC-16-00003-PHX-ROS
ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

Upon consideration of the Petition to Enforce Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") Summonses ("Petition") (Doc. 1) and the Declaration of Revenue Officer Alisa Lee ("Declaration") (Doc. 1-1),

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED the respondent, C. Anthony Williams, show cause in writing why he should not be compelled to obey and comply with the IRS summonses served on him by Revenue Officer Alisha Lee within thirty (30) days of this Order being served upon Mr. Williams or his attorney, if Mr. Williams's attorney agrees to accept service on his behalf.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED rather than filing written arguments, Mr. Williams may notify the Court, in a writing filed with the Clerk within the same thirty (30) day period and served on counsel for the United States at the address on the Petition, that Mr. Williams has no objection to enforcement of the summonses. Mr. Williams's obligation to submit further written response to this Order will be excused, and an order enforcing the summonses will be entered.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED the United States may respond in writing within fourteen (14) days of Mr. Williams's filing.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED a copy of this Order, together with a copy of the Petition and its exhibits, shall be served upon Mr. Williams in accordance with Rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure within thirty (30) days of the date this Order is served upon counsel for the United States. Alternatively, documents may be served upon Mr. Williams's attorney within the same time period, if Mr. Williams's attorney agrees to accept service on his behalf. Pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4.1(a), the Court hereby appoints Revenue Officer Lee, or any other person designated by the IRS, to effect service in this case.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED proof of service shall be filed with the Clerk as soon as practicable.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED because the Declaration attached to the Petition constitutes a prima facie showing that the investigation is being conducted for a legitimate purpose, that the inquiries are relevant to that purpose, that the information sought is not already within the possession of the IRS, and that the administrative steps required by the Internal Revenue Code have been substantially followed, the burden of coming forward has shifted to Mr. Williams to oppose enforcement of the summonses. Any uncontested allegations in the Petition will be considered admitted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED Mr. Williams's failure to comply with this Order may subject him to sanctions for contempt of court.

To obtain a copy of the Petition and other pleadings in the case, contact the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Arizona at (602) 514-7500 and reference the case name: United States of America v. C. Anthony Williams.

Two newspaper readers behind every saguaro

The saguaro is Arizona's state wildflower and it seems like they're everywhere. In fact, there are 1.9 million saguaros dotting our state's landscape. That's impressive! But it's less than half the number of Arizonans who read newspapers. More than 4.5 million people in our state consider themselves readers of Arizona newspapers.

If you're a newspaper reader, you're in great company!
And if you're an advertiser, don't get "stuck" without the facts.
Arizona newspapers deliver for your business.

Right now, government officials have to publish their intentions in the newspaper, including where they intend to build facilities you don't want down the block. But that will change if some politicians get their way. They want to put public notices online instead, buried on some little-used, rarely visited government website. Don't let the government keep you in the dark. Tell your lawmakers to keep notices like this in PRINT in my local newspaper.
