Set-aside abuse

Learning that various Milwaukee-area contractors are suspected of taking advantage of their status as minority- and disabled-veteran-owned businesses to improperly obtain federal contracts, a couple of construction-litigation lawyers said it's hard to make such set-asides abuse proof.

Federal officials are investigating five minority- and disabled veteran-owned contractors on the suspicion that they had used their minority- and veteran-owned designations to improperly win $268 million in "set-aside" contracts from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs and other federal agencies. The money in question was meant to benefit businesses that have been certified by the federal government as being disadvantaged.

The investigation centers on five Milwaukee-area contractors: Brian Lee Ganos, president of Sonag Co. Inc. and vice president of Nuvo Construction Inc.; Jorge Lopez, president of Nuvo Construction; Telemachos Agoudemos, president of CST Inc.; James Edward Hubbell, project manager for C3T; and

Also being investigated is Lori Michaud, owner of LJM Accounting Services, which provides accounting services to the other companies involved in the probe.

Kim Hurtado, managing shareholder of Wauwatosa-based Hurtado Zimmerman, said there will always be someone who tries to improperly take advantage of government set-asides and similar policies.

Minnesota firm awarded $94M contract for school projects in Hudson

MINNEAPOLIS, MN - Minneapolis-based Kraus-Anderson is crossing the St. Croix River for its latest school-construction project, a $93.9 million expansion and remodeling job in Hudson, Wisconsin.

The Hudson School District recently selected Kraus-Anderson to provide construction-manager services for the project, which includes renovations and additions to Hudson High School and Hudson Middle School.

Tracy Habisch-Ahlin, the school district's communications coordinator, said the district's board of education selected Kraus-Anderson in July after conducting interviews with four construction managers.

Designed by Milwaukee-based Bray Architects, the project features a 130,000-square-foot addition and extensive renovation of Hudson High School, 1501 Vine St. The project includes auditorium improvements and a new athletic stadium.

Hudson Middle School, at 1300 Carmichael Road, will get a 32,000-square-foot, two-story classroom and gymnasium addition.

Middle-school construction will begin in earnest this fall and continue through the school year. The high school project is scheduled to begin in April and wrap up by summer 2019, according to Kraus-Anderson.

When planning the project, it made sense to start with the middle school and to finish that work during the school year because it's a smaller project that will cause fewer disruptions to school operations, Habisch-

Gary Zifko, a project manager for Kraus-Anderson, said the project team will communicate extensively with school staff, parents and students “so everyone is aware of where we are working and how it might affect school operations.”

Nick Ouellette, Hudson School District Superintendent, said in a press release that Kraus-Anderson was selected in part because of its “deep experience with projects of this scale” and a “high level of satisfaction with the company’s work.”

District voters passed three separate bond questions in April to pay for the project, including $74.3 million for the high-school expansion. Habisch-Ahlin said the existing high school was built in 1962 and 1963 with additional space added in the mid-1970s. The building has seen improvements through the years, but district officials say it’s not up to current standards.

A driver for the project was the need for additional space, but “also to improve the space to meet the needs of 21st century learning,” Habisch-Ahlin said.

Over the past five years, Kraus-Anderson has managed more than half a billion dollars in K-12 school construction, from new buildings and expansions to remodels and deferred maintenance, according to its website.

“The school market is definitely running at full steam,” Zifko said.

NEWS BRIEF

Hoan Bridge project receives regional innovation award

Recent work to repaint and rebuild Milwaukee’s Hoan Bridge has won an award for its technical and material innovations, the Wisconsin Department of Transportation announced on Tuesday.

The project, which wrapped up in December, is being recognized for its “Best Use of Innovation” by the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials, a non-profit group that represents highway and transportation departments throughout the U.S., including some in Washington, D.C. and Puerto Rico.

WisDOT officials said the project team working on the Hoan Bridge was recognized for using a variety of methods to communicate with businesses, residents and commuters. They included public meetings, the project’s website, social media and television. The project also used innovations designed to reduce traffic disturbances and keep the project on schedule. Among the innovations were:

- Movable concrete barriers, which helped keep lanes open for traffic going in each direction during peak construction periods;
- stainless steel reinforcements to provide better protection from moisture and corrosion; ■ a light-detection and ranging-technology system to collect and process bridge-component data; and

■ comprehensive painting specifications, which provided greater detail and direction to minimize the risk of unexpectedly early failure.

The regional award comes as part of the 2016 America’s Transportation Awards competition. Established in 2008, the competition has a goal of drawing attention to projects that deliver the best return on investments in transportation projects.

cause there’s a lot of money in these set-aside programs,” she said.

When abuse occurs, the federal government is far from being the only victim, Hurtado said.

“Unfortunately, when they do that, it really harms the people these set-aside programs intend to serve,” she said.

Anthony Murdock, a partner at Halloin & Murdock, of Milwaukee, said people living in southeast Wisconsin might be surprised that suspicions are now hanging over a group of local contractors. But such cases are far from uncommon, especially in places like Chicago.

Murdock said general contractors are often required to ensure a certain percentage of the spending on government contracts goes to disadvantaged businesses.

“It might cost you the project entirely if you can’t fill (these) contracts,” he said, adding that the risk of such a loss can tempt contractors to cut corners.

At other times, a minority- or disabled-veteran-owned company might find it cannot perform the job it was hired to do. The temptation for a general contractor then becomes to bring in another company as a replacement and yet continue using the disadvantaged business’ name to keep its participation numbers up.

The current case involving Milwaukee-area businesses has yet to see any criminal charges filed. Even so, federal officers obtained and used a warrant last week to search a building at 5510 W. Florist Avenue, in Milwaukee, which houses offices and warehouses used by Sonag, Nuvo, C3T and Pagasa. They also searched Michaud’s home office, in Menomonee Falls.

The federal agent asking for the warrant argued that Ganos, after finding that his own Sonag could no longer benefit from government set-asides, helped some of his acquaintances set up their own qualifying companies. These new businesses, though, were not actually being run by their ostensible owners but were instead under Ganos’ direct control, according to documents in the case.

The application for the warrant used in Wednesday’s search states that Ganos had successfully used his status as a Hispanic to become qualified to receive federal set asides two years after he established Sonag Co. in 1992. The trouble was that the disadvantaged-business certification that he had lasted for only nine years.

Ganos had thus “graduated” from the federal set-aside program by 2003. Ganos responded to the loss of his privileged status by identifying Lopez and Millan as people who could qualify for the set asides if they opened businesses of their own. That’s when Nuvo and Pagasa were established, and Lopez and Millan were put in charge.

Agoudemos, a service-disabled veteran, was also recruited to become the owner of C3T.

Attempts to reach representatives of Sonag and Nuvo were not successful by press time on Tuesday.

Hurtado said she was not familiar with the specifics in the Ganos case and declined to comment on it.

She said that any abuse of government set-asides is particularly unfortunate because the programs do have a noble goal.

“We have a significant history of lacking women- and minority-owned participation in construction,” Hurtado said.

Hurtado said one of the best ways governments can prevent fraud is to assign someone to follow up with a certified-disadvantaged businesses and check on the work it is supposed to be doing.

UW to seek $454.6M for building projects

Todd Richmond
Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — University of Wisconsin System leaders plan to ask Gov. Scott Walker and Republican legislators to put $454.6 million in the state's next budget for building maintenance, renovation and construction.

About $100 million of that would go toward maintenance. A new mechanical engineering building at the University of Wisconsin-Platteville would be the only new structure; the rest of the money would go toward renovations. Ray Cross, president of the UW System, says the state's current budget allocated $86 million for buildings.

Word of the proposed request for building projects came at the same time that UW officials announced plans to ask the governor and lawmakers to lift a tuition freeze and give the system about $40 million in new dollars in the next state budget.

The Board of Regents is expected to approve the request at a meeting this month. Cross gave reporters a preview of the request that asks Walker to allow the regents to set tuition and calls for an additional $42.5 million in state aid. Cross said the new money would be used to shorten the time students take to graduate, expand programs that offer high-school students college credits for completing certain courses and strengthen student internship programs.

The request asks for no new money to pay for fringe-benefit adjustments or utility bills. Cross said system officials don't foresee having a need for such money because about 1,800 fewer system employees are on state health insurance, choosing instead to get on their spouses' plans. He also noted that the system has lost about 1,200 employees.

"It's not an excessive request," Cross said. "It's time to invest. Let's send a message that this is really important."

The system has been grappling with tight finances over the past four years. Walker and Republican lawmakers froze in-state undergraduate tuition in the 2013-15 state budget after word broke that system schools were sitting on massive reserves while raising tuition year after year. They extended the freeze for another two years in the 2015-

17 budget and cut $250 million from the system.

Other components of the request include:

- New statutory language allowing the regents to issue bonds backed by program fees to fund projects. The state building commission would release the bonds in the amounts requested.

- Allow the system to purchase academic-related items without going through the state Department of Administration.

The next state budget is a long way off. State agencies must submit their requests to Walker by mid-September, and he will release his version of the budget early next year.

The whole process is likely to wrap up next summer.
