‘WAKANDA FOREVER’
SHOWCASES AN EMPIRE IN MOURNING

Gilm reverberates with the agony of loss. Page 2

MOVIE REVIEW

In 'Wakanda Forever,' an empire mourns and rebuilds

By Jake Coyle

The Associated Press

Made in the wake of tragedy, "Black Panther: Wakanda Forever" reverberates with the agony of loss, piercing the usually less consequential superhero realm. Like someone going through the stages of grief, Ryan Coogler's movie is at turns mournful and rootless, full of rage and blessed with clarity. In the fantastical Marvel Cinematic Universe where mortality is almost always a plaything, wrestling with the genuine article, in the death of T'Challa star Chadwick Boseman, makes for an unusually uncertain, soul-searching kind of blockbuster-scale entertainment.

It's a fine line, of course, between paying tribute and trading on it. I did cringe a little when the Marvel logo unspooled with images of Boseman within the letters: Eulogy as branding. That "Black Panther," a cultural phenomenon and a box-office smash, would get a sequel, at all, was momentarily in doubt after Boseman's unexpected death from colon cancer in 2020. Radically reworked by Coogler and co-writer Joe Robert Cole, "Wakanda Forever" pushed ahead in hopes of honoring both Boseman and the rich Afrocentric world of the landmark original. In its admirably muddled way, it succeeds in both.

Part of the profound appeal of Coogler's first "Black Panther" resided in its deft channeling of the real world into mythology. It fed centuries of colonialism and exploitation into a big-screen spectacle of identity and resistance. In an invented African nation, Coogler conjured both a fanciful could-have-been history and emotional right-now reality.

"Wakanda Forever," which opens in theaters Thursday, expands on that, weaving in a Latin American perspective with a similar degree of cultural specificity in the introduction of the Aztec-inspired antagonist Namor (Tenoch Huerta), king of the ancient underwater world of Talokan. At the same time, Boseman's death is poignantly filtered into the story from the start, beginning with off-screen death throes.

"Time is running out," we hear whispered while the screen is still black. Shuri (Letitia Wright), T'Challa's tech-wiz sister, is frantically trying to craft something in her AI lab to save her brother. But in a moment, their mother, Queen Ramonda (Angela Bassett), informs her: "Your brother is with the ancestors." He's laid to rest in a glorious, celebratory procession, carried through a multi-tiered channel of white-clad, singing-and-dancing Wakandans. It's as stunning as anything Coogler has shot.

After this prologue, "Wakanda Forever" shifts to a year later. "Black Panther" took some of the spy-thriller shape of a Bond movie, and the sequel carries that on in a new geopolitical context. At the United Nations, the United States and France are pressuring for access to vibranium, the rare metal that Wakanda has built its empire on. Soon after, a U.S. military expedition discovers vibranium at the bottom of the ocean. But just as they're celebrating, ever" through grief with a staunch defense of Wakanda that rebalances the newly king-less kingdom. She carries on.

What follows is a globe-trotting plot that draws the film away from perhaps its greatest asset in Wakanda but uncovers new places of latent power among historically exploited people. Shuri and Okoye (Danai Gurira), the Dora Milaje general, travel to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to seek the student (Dominique Thorne) who created a vibranium detector. In the Washington D.C. area, Wakanda's friendly CIA officer (Martin Freeman) experiences new scrutiny from his boss, played by an unnamed comic actress familiar to Beltway politics.

But, mostly, a series of exchanges draw Wakanda and Talokan closer. Are they friends and foes? They are, at least, a captivating tweak to the mythology of Atlantis. Talokan, dark and watery, is no Wakanda, though, and there's less hint this time of a larger society. Still, Huerta brings a magnetism to Namor. In many ways, he's a corollary to Michael B. Jordan's Killmonger, a non-villain whose fury is in many ways justified. His anger appeals to the still-grieving Shuri who finds herself ready, after T'Challa's death, to "burn the world."

As in the first "Black Panther," the question again hangs in the balance of whether, in a pain-ridden and prejudiced world, rage is the answer. This time, it applies to another powerful civilization, too. "Wakanda Forever," where the role of Black Panther is passed down, is in more ways than one about the transfer of power.

Wakanda and Talokan are brought together a little haphazardly in conflict, as Namor pressures the African nation to join his brewing surface war. "Wakanda Forever" proceeds as a murky, middle-act film that may ultimately serve as a bridge to future "Black Panther" chapters. But along the way, there are countless marvels that Coogler conjures with returning magic-workers like production designer Hannah Beachler and costume designer Ruth E. Carter. How the Talokan are flung into the air by whales. The fierce friendliness of Guri- ra's performance. Lupita Nyong'o is unfortunately less central here, but every time her Nakia (who has been laying low in Haiti) is present, she graces the film.

"Wakanda Forever" is overlong, a little unwieldy and somewhat mystifyingly steers toward a climax on a barge in the middle of the Atlantic. But Coogler's fluid command of mixing intimacy with spectacle remains gripping.

'Causeway's' director on Jennifer Lawrence, the joy of Elaine May

By Mark Olsen
Los Angeles Times

The new film "Causeway," in theaters and streaming on Apple TV+, centers on two remarkably low-key but nevertheless riveting performances by Jennifer Lawrence and Brian Tyree Henry. The film is the first produced by Lawrence and is also the debut feature for director Lila Neugebauer.

Neugebauer is among the most acclaimed directors on the New York theater scene, having directed the world premieres of Sarah DeLappe's "The Wolves," Branden Jacob-Jenkins' "Everybody" and Annie Baker's "The Antipodes." She made her Broadway debut with the 2018 production of Kenneth Lonergan's "The Waverly Gallery" that was nominated for two Tonys, winning the award for lead actress in a play for Elaine May.

"Causeway," from a screenplay credited to novelists Elizabeth Sanders ("The Last Light"), Ottessa Moshfegh ("My Year of Rest and Relaxation") and Luke Goebel ("Fourteen Stories, None of Them Are Yours"), opens with Lynsey (Lawrence), having returned to the U.S. from a tour of duty in Afghanistan with a traumatic brain injury, painstakingly relearning how to walk, hold objects, care for herself and simply remember things.

Back at her mother's house in New Orleans, she gets a job cleaning pools and strikes up a halting, tentative friendship with James (Henry), a mechanic patiently trying to fix her broken-down pickup truck. They each find comfort in the other, two people trying to move through the traumas that have come to define their lives.

The film has a most unusual production history, with a break of two years in the middle of production. Neugebauer sat for an interview during September's Toronto International Film Festival, on the morning of the world premiere of "Causeway."

Q: This season, there are a number of other theater directors with films coming out, such as Michael Grandage, Martin McDonagh and Sam Mendes. What do you think keeps attracting theater people to cinema?

A: First of all, I'm quite delighted and honored to be put in a list with the people you just mentioned. The processes of filmmaking and directing a play are, in my experience, radically dissimilar — the structure of the process, the nature of how time operates in the mediums, in process and in the outcome, the experience of time. But one of the joyful revelations of directing a film for the first time is, to me, how completely aligned the impulses are at the core. The primacy of visual composition, the centrality of the conversation with the actor and the kind of joyful athleticism of the collaborative conversation with everyone in the room, or at least that's how I like to work. I guess I would say the connection to me feels intuitive, and it's my great wish that many more of my peers and friends from the New York theater world might find their way behind a camera.

Q: There's two editors credited on the film. What was it like for you being in the editing room?

A: The context for that reality is in part that we started shooting this film in the summer of 2019 and we encountered some setbacks, inclusive of but not limited to heat waves, flash flooding, hurricane and an evacuation from a hurricane. And by the time we were able to resume, we encountered another setback, which was a global pandemic. So we resumed two years later. The first block of my editing was spent with Luke Johnson. And the second block of my editing was spent with Rob Frazen. I would say that my collaboration with Luke was instrumental in crystallizing the core thrust of the film. By the time I was with Rob, we had completed photography, but that process entailed far more than filling in the holes. Because of course, everything inside of a film is talking to itself and the recalibration of performance architecture, temporality and story structure, was reborn in that process and rearchitected by virtue of having everything that we needed.

Q: In her recent Vogue profile, Jennifer Lawrence talked about how much the story changed from one period of filming to the other, including the decision not to include flashbacks filmed depicting her character's time in Afghanistan. For you, how did the story evolve when you came back?

A: I mean, the cat's outta the bag, we shot flashbacks. And you hear it is a cliché, but you hear about killing your darlings and then you get to live it. That photography was visually arresting. The performances were incredible. But it became apparent to me that the strongest version of this film lived exclusively in the present tense. And I would add that the singular chemistry between Jen and Brian as actors and as people was so apparent that that story shifted towards the center of the film.

Q: Are you surprised at all by the movie it's become? Is the movie you ended up with the movie you thought you were making when you started?

A: It has evolved. And I would say that in everything I've ever made, I've tried to listen to what the thing wants to be. My point of view is that you come in intensely prepared and then you assume nothing. You do your research, you do your preparation, you have a line of attack — and I learned this from theater — but to not recognize what's actually live in front of you is to miss the opportunity of making [the work] with other people.

I think this is a film that revealed itself to me in the course of making it, and at the same time, its core DNA is absolutely rooted in the original draft of the screenplay that I read, which was an adaptation of an unpublished novella by a woman named Elizabeth Sanders, a fantastic first-time screenwriter. That material then benefited from the remarkable contributions of Ottessa Moshfegh and Luke Goebel. And then as I suspect is true in basically any filmmaking processes, there is the movie on the page, the movie you shoot and the movie you edit. [Production designer] Jack Fisk told me that on day one of prep, but I also had to live that to really understand it.

Q: Since I saw the movie, I've had a hard time describing it to people, because when you say it's about this female soldier with a traumatic brain injury, it sounds a lot more dour than it is. How do you describe the feel and tone of the movie?

A: I kind of love that you had a hard time describing it. From my life

Baking spirits bright: New 'Great British Baking Show: Holidays' is here

By Michelle Rose
TV Media

The holiday season is synonymous with traditions, and in the TV world — or at least on Netflix — one of those traditions involves “The Great British Baking Show” (otherwise known as “The Great British Bake Off” in the United Kingdom).

Hosted by Noel Fielding and Matt Lucas and judged by Prue Leith and Paul Hollywood, the popular baking competition returned to Netflix with a new season Sept. 16, just three days after Series 13 (Collection 10 here) premiered in its homeland. Since then, a new episode has been added to the Netflix library each Friday, and based on the 10-episode season format and usual timing, the finale should be available Friday, Nov. 18.

If you need more “Great British Baking Show” in your life (and who doesn’t), Friday, Nov. 18, is also the day the latest holiday installments arrive on Netflix.

Unlike the series, the “Great British Baking Show” holiday specials run one year later in the U.S. and Canada than they do in the U.K., where they aired on Channel 4 in 2021 — so you might want to resist the temptation of looking up spoilers online.

As in years past, the fifth season of “The Great British Baking Show: Holidays” will feature two hour-long episodes. The first installment is the Christmas special featuring “It’s a Sin” stars Olly Alexander, Nathaniel Curtis, Lydia West and Shaun Dooley. Naturally, the four actors compete against one another for the coveted “Christmas Star Baker” title.

Paul Hollywood, Prue Leith and Noel Fielding from “The Great British Baking Show Holidays”

The second special of the holiday season is the franchise’s New Year’s special, in which “Paul Hollywood, Prue Leith, Matt Lucas and Noel Fielding see in the new year with 2018 ‘Bake Off’ runner-up Kim-Joy and fellow baker Jon, and Hermine and Rowan from the 2020 ‘Bake Off’ bubble.”

So, why not take Netflix up on its invitation to “deck the halls with sugar, butter and chocolate” and get into the festive spirit with the fifth edition of “The Great British Baking Show: Holidays”? Both specials premiere stateside along with the current season’s finale Friday, Nov. 18, on Netflix.

in the theater, I'm drawn to experiences that upon leaving you can't reduce to a satisfying anecdote. I am drawn to experiences that in some way exceed my capacity to distill them perfectly because they can only be encountered in their presence. But to actually answer your question, I guess I would say, the story follows an intimate portrait of a woman struggling to adjust to her life in her home, in New Orleans, after a traumatic injury, and it centers on the beginning of a relationship with this mechanic and an unexpected connection that they begin to forge. I think the film is a patient, careful excavation of how we actually begin to change, how we cope, how we begin to heal, in the process, reaching out, retreating, trying to connect, self-protecting. And that journey in this particular film is charted one, seemingly small, sometimes painful, sometimes revelatory, but hopelessly ultimately meaningful step at a time.

Q : Jennifer's performance is something that's going to surprise people. It is not a performance of movie star polish. There's something really unvarnished about it. Can you talk about your collaboration to bring that out?

A : The first two weeks that we met, we sat at her kitchen table and we read through the script one page at a time, just reading it and talking about it and getting to know each other. We did not talk explicitly about what we wanted her performance to look like or feel like; we were immersing ourselves in the psyche of this character together. What I have been struck by in her work in this film personally is a capacity I knew she had, that she can convey such a raw depth of feeling in such a restrained, understated register. Which I think requires a kind of discipline that I knew she possessed.

Q : The dynamic between Lawrence's character and Henry's character is so unique. As a viewer, you're not exactly rooting for them to get together in a romantic way, it's something else. You want them to just kind of be friends and help each other. Was that a difficult dynamic to mine, to not have it fall into the conventional, will they/won't they of a romance?

A : I'm endlessly fascinated by the ways in which the project of building any kind of meaningful intimacy is so often characterized by contradictory impulses to be vulnerable and to protect ourselves and that kind of dance that unfolds between them. It's unique to the humanity of their characters and to how Jen and Brian so specifically imagined those characters.

Q : You directed Elaine May to a Tony Award in "The Waverly Gallery." At this point, she is a genuine national treasure. What was it like working with her?

A : I mean, she's kind of my idol. She's everything you want her to be and more. She's utterly hilarious. She's the best storyteller I've ever met. When you start a rehearsal process with table work, you sit around a table and you read through the play and start to talk about the scenes and ask foundational questions. And at the beginning of the day, there's a little small talk, drinking your coffee, and people would ask Elaine questions and she would tell us stories. And over the course of the process, I noticed that we all started coming earlier and earlier. Rehearsal starts at 10, we'd get there like 9:50, then we'd be there at like 9:43. Then suddenly people were there at 9:30 because we just wanted to listen to her talk.

You can think the scene is wired a certain way. And then Elaine kind of shifts the prism of the scene and suddenly you realize there's this other way into its logic that is revelatory in this whole other way. She's brilliant. My obsession with Elaine began at a very early age, so I would just say that I can't wait to see whatever she produces next. She has a lot left to do.

Q : Well, that gives me plenty to work with. Thank you so much for your time. I appreciate it.

A : Can I just tell you one more thing? There's only one more thing I want you to know, because it's just too important to the film for me not to mention. It is the people I talked to when I was making this film. I knew from the outset that I couldn't, and wouldn't, make this film without meaningfully consulting with medical experts in the field of traumatic brain injury and with people who had lived this experience, and the conversations that I had with VA medical professionals with expertise in traumatic brain injury and with veterans and U.S. armed forces service members, they were just so indispensable to the creation of this film. It wouldn't exist without them.

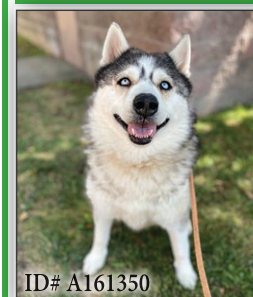

Q : What did you learn from those conversations?

A : It's gonna sound really hyperbolic, but those were life-changing conversations in terms of my education on what inspires different people to enlist, their experiences deployed and the challenges they face upon returning home. I'm in awe of the medical professionals I talked to and the astonishing care that they are providing to a population that needs that care. And I am also aware now that there are great numbers in that population that are struggling to access care. So I would say my awareness of that is quite heightened now.

Richard Gere and Julia Roberts in “Pretty Woman”

FLIP OR FLOP

HGTV Noon

Join Tarek and Christina on another house-flipping adventure in this rebroadcast. When they get the chance to flip a house of impressive beach views, they go all in. Distracted by the scenery, unexpected foundation costs catch them by surprise.

HOW TO TRAIN YOUR DRAGON 2

SYFY 6:35 p.m.

Hiccup and Toothless explore a secret ice cave filled with hundreds of wild dragons, but trouble arises when dragon hunters arrive. The star-studded voice cast of this sequel includes Kit Harington, Kristen Wiig, America Ferrera and Gerard Butler.

PRETTY WOMAN

AMC 7:00 p.m.

A wealthy businessman (Richard Gere) hires an out-of-luck call girl (Julia Roberts) to be his companion at social events for a week in this classic Garry Marshall romance. As the pair's relationship grows, it becomes more than a simple transaction.

Sam Reid in “Interview with the Vampire”

GIRL MEETS FARM

Food 11:00 a.m.

Molly Yeh combines traditions and flavors to create a Chinese-inspired Thanksgiving in this new, holiday-themed episode. Her five-spice turkey with a sweet and sour glaze is served with sticky rice stuffing and greens with onions and chili crisp.

THE TOYS THAT BUILT AMERICA

Hist 9:00 p.m.

In a new episode of this docuseries chronicling revolutionary inventions and additions to the American toy industry, a Yale-educated medical doctor introduces a groundbreaking steel building toy that changes childhood play-time for generations to come.

INTERVIEW WITH THE VAMPIRE

AMC 10:05 p.m.

Louis (Jacob Anderson) continues telling his story to enraptured investigative journalist Daniel Molloy (Eric Bogosian) in a new episode of this series based on Anne Rice's classic horror novel of the same name. Sam Reid stars as the antiheroic Les-tat.

Flipping the game: Curtis '50 Cent' Jackson brings reno series A&E

By Michelle Rose

TV Media

FLIPPING THE GAME»

Launched seven years ago, the “Power” multi-series franchise has been a huge success for both Starz and executive producer Curtis Jackson, also known by his rap moniker “50 Cent.” But now that his overall deal with Starz is done, the Grammy winner-turned-entertainment-mogul has made it clear he’s ready to move on.

This parting of the ways won’t be a clear break, however, because Jackson’s G-Unit Film & Television has a few projects currently in the works at Lionsgate Television, Starz’s parent company, and, according to The Hollywood Reporter, one of those projects is the unscripted show “Property Players,” which landed at A&E Networks following a bidding war.

Slated for the basic cable network’s lifestyle programming block, Home.Made.Nation, “Property Players” is a new series that focuses on real estate investors DJ Envy and Cesar Pina. If you don’t recognize the names, the former is a hip-hop producer and one of the hosts of “The Breakfast Club” radio morning show; the latter is a bestselling author and real estate authority. The two have been investing in properties since 2018.

“Property Players” will follow this duo and their team “as they flip their own houses for big profits, or mentor celebrities and their community entering the real estate investment world.”

The premiere date has yet to be announced, and while Jackson remains one of the show’s executive producers, the Grammy winner is now focusing on plotting the next chapter for his production company, which reportedly has 25 projects in production or in development.

Given his numerous callouts against the network on social media, Jackson’s decision to part ways with Starz didn’t come as a complete surprise. His Power franchise, the series “BMF” and even the upcoming historical drama “Queen Nzinga” will still proceed on Starz, but Jackson, who acknowledged “we had nothing but success, so no hard feelings,” is now free to shop projects elsewhere.

HEY NOW, YOU’RE IN ‘ALL-STARS’» It seems “America’s Got Talent” got another spinoff. NBC has officially greenlit “America’s Got Talent: All-Stars,” a spinoff of the long-running competition series from executive producer Simon Cowell.

As the title suggests, this all-star edition will bring back contestants from the past 17 seasons of “America’s Got Talent” (or “AGT”), including “winners, finalists, fan favorites and viral sensations from previous seasons of ‘America’s Got Talent’ and ‘Got Talent’ franchises around the world.” That international angle should make for an interesting competition, given that there are more than 70 editions around the globe.

Cowell, who created the format and first introduced it to American audiences in 2006, has been a judge on “AGT” since 2016’s Season 11. The executive producer will judge the talent in the “All-Stars” edition, too, and he’ll be joined by series regulars Heidi Klum and Howie Mandel.

Terry Crews is also crossing over to host “All-Stars” — in fact, the only “AGT” crew member who hasn’t boarded the spinoff is judge Sofia Vergara. But instead of lining up a replacement, “All-Stars” will simply stick with a three-judge panel.

Production on the new installment began last month, and it should land in the NBC prime-time schedule sometime in 2023. Another spinoff, “America’s Got Talent: Extreme,” hasn’t been renewed for a second season and likely won’t be — especially after contestant Jonathan Goodwin was left seriously injured when a stunt went horribly wrong.

In an interview with The Buzz, Cowell described the show as “the most nerve-racking thing I have ever done in my life ... it was something we wanted to do, but I would never go through that again.”

FROM BOOK TO SCREEN»

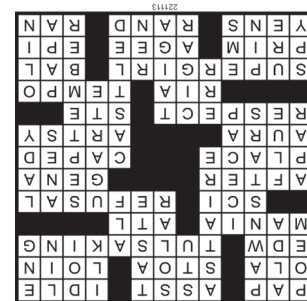

The winner of the 2020 National Book Award for Fiction, Charles Yu’s “Interior Chinatown,” is ready to make the big leap from page to screen.

Hulu has officially greenlit a series based on the novel, and the author, who serves as showrunner, is working on adapting his novel for TV. What’s more, Jimmy O. Yang (“Crazy Rich Asians,” 2018) is set to star in the series, and the first episode will be directed by executive producer and “What We Do in the Shadows” creator Taika Waititi, who also happens to be co-hosting the MTV EMAs this week with his wife, singer/songwriter Rita Ora (Nov. 13 live on MTV and on Paramount+ Nov. 14).

Hulu’s adaptation of “Interior Chinatown” has been in development since October 2020. In the book, the story is told in screenplay form, complete with stage directions, scene headings and character notes. A satire, “Interior Chinatown” centres on Willis Wu (Yang), a background actor on a TV police procedural titled “Black and White.” The reader follows Willis as he juggles his on-screen and daytime jobs, waiting tables while dreaming of a world beyond Chinatown. But after he inadvertently witnesses a crime, Willis begins to untangle a criminal web and uncover secrets that give him a taste of life in the spotlight while also revealing his own family’s long-buried history.

“Interior Chinatown” is the second novel from Yu, whose previous TV writing credits include “Westworld” and “Legion.” The author is also credited as co-producer of “Legion” and serves as executive producer on another TV adaptation, “American Born Chinese,” coming soon to Disney+.

Leslie Grossman in “American Horror Story: NYC”

WUTHERING HEIGHTS

TCM 3:00 p.m.

Screen icon Laurence Olivier stars in this classic Emily Brontë story about the doomed love between the daughter of a middle-class, early-19th-century York-shire family and the charis-matic young man they take in and raise as one of their own.

CHUCKY

SYFY USA 9:00 p.m.

Incarnate Lord goes into lockdown with the Chucky dolls inside in this new epi-sode, the second last of Season 2. Meanwhile, Nica (Fiona Dourif) moves ahead with her plan. Zackary Ar-thur, Björgvin Arnarson and Alyvia Alyn Lind star in this horror series.

AMERICAN HORROR STORY: NYC

FX 10:00 p.m.

The most recent, New York City-themed season of this horror anthology series airs its two-part finale this eve-ning, tying up a string of murders and disappearances in the Big Apple during the 1980s. Denis O’Hare, Leslie Grossman and Zachary Quinto star.
